§ 1. Common Carriers Defined.—A common carrier is one who undertakes for hire to transport the goods of those who may choose to employ him from place to place.[1] The tests whether a carrier is a "common carrier" are:

Tennessee.—Moss v. Bettis, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.), 661, 13 Am. Rep. 1.

Every person who undertakes to carry for compensation the goods of all persons, indifferently, is a common carrier. Mershon v. Hobensack, 22 N. J. L. 372, affirmed in 23 N. J. L. 580.

One holding out to the public as ready to undertake for hire the transportation of goods and so inviting custom of the public is a common carrier. Lloyd v. Haugh, etc., Transfer Co., 223 Pa. 148, 72 Atl. 516. See, also, Russell v. Livingston (N. Y.), 19 Barb. 346.

A person engaged in the business of

First, he must be engaged in the business of carrying goods for others as a public employee, and so hold himself out; second, he must undertake to carry goods of the kind to which his business is confined; third, he must undertake to carry by the methods by which his business is conducted and over his established roads; fourth, transportation must be for hire; and, fifth, an action must lie against him if he refused without reason to carry such goods for those willing to comply with his terms.[2] It is not necessary, to constitute one a common carrier, that a stipulation should be entered into as to the amount of freight to be paid. But, unless a right to compensation exists, the common-law liability of a common carrier is not created, though there may be the responsibility of a mandatary incurred.[3] Common carriers undertake generally, and not as a casual occupation;[4] but in order to make them such, it is not necessary that this should be their exclusive business, or that they should be continuously or regularly employed in it. They may combine it with another and several avocations, and yet be common carriers, and subject to the "extraordinary liabilities which have been imposed upon them in consequence of the public nature of their employment."[5] In determining whether a person or corporation engaged in transporting goods for others is a common carrier the mode employed in such transcarrying for others generally, to and from any point, is a common carrier. Pennewill v. Cullen (Del.), 5 Har. 238.

A common carrier is one who holds himself out in common, that is, to all people alike, that he is engaged in the business of transporting persons, or certain kinds of property, and is prepared and ready to carry for all who apply, on the same terms. Judgment, 80 N. E. 636, reversed. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Henry, 170 Ind. 94, 83 N. E. 710.

Any person or corporation offering its services to all persons similarly situated and performing as its public vocation the services of transporting passengers, freight, or intelligence is a common carrier in the particular spheres of such employment. Winnett v. Union Stock Yards Co. of Omaha, 81 Neb. 67, 115 N. W. 627.

When a carrier has a regularly established business for carrying all or certain articles, and especially if that carrier is a corporation created for the purpose of the carrying trade, and the carriage of the articles is embraced within the scope of its chartered powers, it is a common carrier. Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 404, 32 L. Ed. 788, 9 S. Ct. 469; Railroad Co. v. Lockwood (U. S.), 17 Wall. 357, 377, 21 L. Ed. 627.

A common carrier is such by virtue of his occupation, and not by virtue of the responsibilities under which he rests, and therefore the nature of his occupation as a common carrier is not affected by a restriction upon his responsibilities, whether the restriction be by law or by contract. Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 440, 32 L. Ed. 788, 9 S. Ct. 469.

2. Santa Fe, etc., R. Co. v. Grant Bros. Constr. Co., 13 Ariz. 186, 108 Pac. 467. See, also, Varble v. Bigley (Ky.), 14 Bush 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435, and Samms v. Stewart, 20 O. 69, 55 Am. Dec. 445. Compare Tuckerman v. Stephens, etc., Transp. Co., 32 N. J. L. 320.

The two distinguishing characteristics of a common carrier are in respect to his duty, he being obliged to transport goods offered, and in respect to his risk, he being liable as an insurer. Varble v. Bigley (Ky.), 14 Bush 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435.

To render one a common carrier his undertaking must be general and for all people indifferently. The undertaking may be evidenced by the carrier's own notice or practically by a series of acts, by his known habitual continuance in this line of business. He must assume to be the servant of the public, he must undertake for all people. A special undertaking for one man does not render a person a common carrier. One who follows carrying for a livelihood or who gives out to the world in any intelligible way that he will take goods or other commodities for transportation from place to place whether for a year, a season or less time is a common carrier and subject to all the liabilities of such. Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393.

3. Knox v. Rives, etc., Co., 14 Ala. 249, 48 Am. Dec. 97.

4. Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 349, 46 Am. Dec. 393; Varble v. Bigley (Ky.), 14 Bush 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435; Samms v. Stewart, 20 O. 69, 55 Am. Dec. 445; Moss v. Bettis, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 661, 13 Am. Rep. 1.

A person whose business is not the carrying of goods, and who does not hold himself out to the world as such, will not be regarded as a common carrier, although he may occasionally carry goods for hire. Samms v. Stewart, 20 O. 69, 55 Am. Dec. 445.

5. Moss v. Bettis, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 661, 13 Am. Rep. 1.

portation is immaterial.[6] Nor is it essential to constitute a common carrier that the person or corporation undertaking such service own the means of transportation.[7] But a carrier who hires his vehicle, or his team, or his servant, for the purposes of transportation, does not assume the liabilities, and acquire the rights of a common carrier.[8] If a man holds himself forth to the public to carry for hire, he is a common carrier as much in his first trip as in his second, third, or fourth.[9] A common carrier of goods which transports live stock is as to the latter property also a common carrier.[10] In some states there are statutes defining common carriers, and some of these definitions have been interpreted by the courts.[11] Persons carrying on a transportation business under circumstances which, in law, constitute them common carriers, can not devest themselves of that character, nor secure an exemption from its liabilities, by declaring in their bills of lading, etc., that they are not to be deemed common carriers. What they are is to be determined by the nature of their business.[12]

A common carrier of passengers is one who undertakes, for hire, to carry all persons indifferently who may apply for passage. It is not essential that the fare should be paid in advance, or tendered, to establish the relation and reciprocal duties of carrier and passenger; it is enough that it is understood that it is to be paid.[13]

The State as a Common Carrier.—When the state engages in business as a common carrier it assumes the same obligations and liabilities which are incident to that business when it is conducted by individuals.[14]

§ 2. Common Carriers and Private Carriers Distinguished.—A common carrier is one who openly professes to carry for hire the goods of all persons who comply with its terms, while a private carrier is one who takes goods

11. Statutory definitions.—By the Georgia statutes, Civil Code, §§ 2263, 2264, a common carrier is defined to be one who undertakes to transport goods for a compensation and who pursues the business constantly or continuously for any period of time or any distance of transportation. These sections of the Code were taken from the common law. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Lippman, 110 Ga. 665, 36 S. E. 202, 50 L. R. A. 673.

Carriers of passengers, do not come within the definition of common carriers contained in the Georgia Civil Code, in connection with § 2276 thereof. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Lippman, 110 Ga. 665, 36 S. E. 202, 50 L. R. A. 673.

A corporation is none the less a general carrier, as defined by the Minnesota statute, Gen. St. 1894, § 379, because its articles do not in terms prescribe that one of its powers is to carry freight. In re Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 101 Minn. 132, 112 N. W. 13.

"Any other carrier engaged in the transmission of messages or transportation of passengers or freight for hire," as used in the Nebraska statute, Laws 1907, p. 320, c. 90, § 4, defining a common carrier to be a corporation, etc., owning, managing, or controlling a railroad, etc., or any express company, car company, sleeping car company, and freight line company, telegraph and telephone companies, and any other carrier engaged in the transmission of messages or transportation of passengers or freight for hire, means only such companies as by their public profession hold themselves out as engaged in transmitting messages or transporting passengers or freight for hire, and as willing to perform such services for any person having occasion to employ them. Winnett v. Union Stock Yards Co., 81 Neb. 67, 115 N. W. 627.

12. Common carriers can not divest themselves of that character by declarations to the contrary.—Bank v. Adams Exp. Co., 93 U. S. 174, 23 L. Ed. 872.

13. Common carrier of passengers defined.—N. & C. R. Co. v. Messino, 33 Tenn. (1 Sneed), 220; McGregor v. Gill, 114 Tenn. 521, 86 S. W. 318, 108 Am. St. Rep. 919.

14. The state as a common carrier.—Western, etc., R. Co. v. Carlton, 28 Ga. 180.

for transportation in a particular case.[15] It is not, every carrying of passengers for hire that constitutes a party a common carrier. A party having the conveniences for carrying persons may in some, or perhaps many, cases carry passengers for hire, when done at the instance of passengers and for their accommodation, without incurring the responsibilities of a common carrier. He would be a private carrier, and held accountable under rules much less stringent.[16] Railroad contractors who consent to carry a passenger on a construction train for hire are not to be deemed common carriers, but only private carriers for hire.[17]

Common Carrier Acting as a Private Carrier.—A common carrier may become a private carrier, or a bailee for hire, when, as a matter of accommodation or special engagement, it undertakes to carry something which it is not its business to carry.[18]

§§ 3-18. Persons and Corporations Who Are Common Carriers—§ 3. Railroad Companies.—A railroad company is a common carrier of both persons and property,[19] unless there is something in its charter to relieve it from

15. Common carriers and private carriers distinguished.—The Cape Charles, 198 Fed. 346. See, also, Samms v. Stewart, 20 O. 69, 55 Am. Dec. 445.

Those who are engaged in the business of carrying for all who apply, indiscriminately, upon a particular route, by whatever mode of transportation they conduct their business, must be regarded as common carriers; while those who undertake to carry in a single instance, for a particular person, not being engaged in the business as a general employment, even for a portion of the time, must be considered private carriers. Johnson v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 16 Fla. 623, 26 Am. Rep. 731, 735.

A private carrier is one who, without being engaged in such business as a public employment, undertakes to deliver goods in a particular case for hire or reward. Pennewill v. Cullen (Del.), 5 Har. 238.

One who is employed to tear down a house for another and deliver the brick and lumber at another place is simply a private carrier for hire. McBurnie v. Stelsly, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1191, 97 S. W. 42.

"For example, if a carrier of produce, running a truck boat between New York City and Norfolk, should be requested to carry a keg of specie, or a load of expensive furniture, which he could justly refuse to take, such agreement might be made in reference to his taking and carrying the same as the parties chose to make, not involving any stipulation contrary to law or public policy." Railroad companies are common carriers engaged in public employment affecting the public interest. Laurel, etc., R. Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co., 25 W. Va. 324; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Sweetzer, 25 W. Va. 434.

A railroad company, which serves business houses located along a spur track by delivering to them cars of freight and cars to be freighted and shipped, is a common carrier with respect to the use it makes of the track. Agee & Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 142 Ala. 344, 37 So. 680.

A railroad company carrying live stock for hire, for such as choose to employ it, is a common carrier; and none the less so that this is not its principal business. Kimball v. Rutland, etc., R. Co., 26 Vt. 247, 62 Am. Dec. 567.

Under Georgia statutes, Code of 1882, § 2083, and Acts of 1855, p. 155, railroad the heavy responsibilities of that character.[20] A railroad company which charges for the transportation of cattle, but permits the shipper to travel on a free pass upon the cars to take care of the cattle, is a common carrier for hire, both as to passenger and cattle.[21] A railroad company transporting at reduced rates men and supplies required by a construction company in grading an extension is not acting as a common carrier.[22] Evidence that twice in two years a railroad company had carried goods in passenger trains does not tend to prove that they intended to hold themselves out as common carriers of goods in passenger trains.[23] The character of common carrier imposed upon a railroad company can not be surrendered. It is imposed as the consideration which the public are to receive in return for the grants and privileges under the charter. The company, perhaps, may abandon its franchise and cease operating its road, but until then, at least, the condition that it shall be a common carrier subsists.[24]

Terminal Company.—A terminal railroad company owning no cars of its own and transporting only the railroad cars of other companies is a common carrier.[25]

Lessee of Railroad.—The lessee of a railroad is a common carrier over a line leased and controlled by it as much as over its own line, and is responsible in damages in respect to the leased road, as well as its own, to any person who has a right of action given him by law against railroad companies.[26]

Railroad Company Acquiring by Contract Right to Use Bridge.—Where a railroad company, by contract with a bridge company, acquires the right to use a bridge, with its approaches, for its engines, cars, and trains, the railroad company, and not the bridge company, is, as to all freight transported by the former over the bridge, the common carrier.[27]

Receivers.—A receiver of a railroad, operating the same, is a common carrier.[28]

companies are common carriers and liable as such in the transportation of freight. Falvey v. Georgia Railroad, 76 Ga. 597, 2 Am. St. Rep. 58.

Under a New Hampshire statute, Pub. St. 1901, c. 160, §§ 21-23, providing that every railroad corporation which shall contract for the transportation of milk in large quantities shall establish a tariff for its transportation by the can, it seems that a railroad company becomes a common carrier of milk on entering into a contract with a firm to furnish it with special cars for the transportation of milk. Baker v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 74 N. H. 100, 65 Atl. 386.

A railroad company, organized under the statute of Ohio, is a common carrier, and is subject to judicial control to prevent the abuse of its powers and privileges. Scofield v. Railway Co., 43 O. St. 571, 3 N. E. 907.

20. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Whittle, 27 Ga. 535, 73 Am. Dec. 741; Caldwell v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 89 Ga. 550, 15 S. E. 678.

Railroad companies are common carriers, though this is not stated in their charter. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson, 19 Ill. 578.

21. Railroad company charging for carrying cattle but permitting shipper to travel free.—Maslin v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 14 W. Va. 180, 35 Am. Rep. 748.

22. Transporting at reduced rates for construction company grading extension.—Santa Fe, etc., R. Co. v. Grant Bros. Constr. Co., 228 U. S. 177, 33 S. Ct. 474, reversing 13 Ariz. 186, 108 Pac. 467.

23. Effect of evidence that goods had been carried in passenger trains.—Elkins v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 23 N. H. 275.

24. Railroad company can not surrender its character of common carrier.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Atlantic, etc., Tel. Co., 1 Wkly. Law Bull. 201, 7 O. Dec. 163, affirmed in 5 O. Dec. 407, 1 Wkly. Law Bull. 309.

A railway company can not, by contract, lay down its public character as a carrier of passengers and goods, which the law, as well as the nature of the employment in which it engages, fixes upon it, and become a mere private carrier. G., C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGown, 65 Tex. 640, 645.

25. Terminal company is a common carrier.—United States v. Sioux City Stock Yards Co., 162 Fed. 556, judgment affirmed in 167 Fed. 126.

26. Lessee of railroad is a common carrier.—Logan & Co. v. Central Railroad, 74 Ga. 684; Caldwell v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 89 Ga. 550, 15 S. E. 678.

§ 4. Owners of Spur Lines or Switches.—Corporation Voluntarily Contracting to Switch Cars Over Its Tracks.—Where a corporation, which is under no legal obligation to do so, voluntarily contracts to switch cars over its tracks, between two or more railways, for which service it collects a certain switching charge for switching the cars, loaded or empty, but charges no traffic rates on the freight transported or transferred in the cars, such corporation, in the performance of such service, assumes none of the responsibilities of a common carrier, but only those of a switchman.[29]

Lumber Company Building a Spur Line.—A spur railway line built by a lumber company on its own land, forming a connecting line between a railroad and its mill, some miles distant, for the purpose of transporting its own products to the railroad for shipment, which had no rolling stock except an engine and logging cars and which neither did, nor held itself out to do, carrying for the public, is not a common carrier.[30]

Mine Owner Constructing a Railroad Switch.—One who constructs a railroad switch, under a statute authorizing the owner of a coal mine within three miles of a railroad to condemn a right of way for a railroad switch to get his product to market, and providing that the owner of such road shall be, so far as they are applicable, governed by the laws relating to other railroads, is not a "common carrier," in contravention of a constitutional enactment, providing that no corporation engaged in the business of common carrier shall own a mine, so that it can either ship or permit to be shipped by the lessees of its mine all products thereof free of charge.[31]

§ 5. Sleeping Car Companies.—See post, "Palace Cars and Sleeping Cars."

§ 6. Street Railways.—Street railways are common carriers of passengers, with duties and responsibilities similar to those of a railroad company.[32]

As to terminal companies, see ante, "Railroad Companies," § 3.

Stockyards company transporting freight a common carrier under laws of Nebraska.—A stockyards company owned about thirty-five miles of railway track, including what was known as a transfer track. Several private industries were conducted adjacent to the premises of the company. The transfer track connected with the track of several railroads. The stockyards company was engaged in the carrying of freight in car load lots. Cars billed to the stockyards or the industries adjacent thereto were placed on the transfer track by the railroad over whose line shipped, and from there hauled by the stockyards company, with its own engines, to the pens or sheds in the yards, or to the industries which were to receive the freight. Outgoing cars were hauled by the stockyards company to the transfer track, where they were received by a railroad. The railroads for such service were charged $1 per car. The stockyards company did not deal with the general public, but only with the railroads and the industries located adjacent to its premises, and with the consignees and consignors of live stock who received shipments or loaded shipments in its yards. It transported freight over its own tracks from one industry to another, and was not engaged in the production of commodities. Its vocation was purely one of service to others, and, with the exception of feeding live stock in transit, the service rendered was the transportation of freight. Held, that the stockyards company was a common carrier within the constitutional amendment adopted at the general election in 1906, creating a state railway commission, and Laws 1907, p. 320, c. 90, § 4, defining a common carrier to be any corporation, etc., owning, operating, etc., any railroad, etc. Winnett v. Union Stock Yards Co., 81 Neb. 67, 115 N. 32. Street railways are common carriers of passengers.—Schloemer v. St. Louis Transit Co., 204 Mo. 99, 102 S. W.

§ 7. Express Companies.—Express companies, engaged in carrying for hire money, goods, and parcels, from one locality to another, although not using their own vehicles for the purpose of transportation, are common carriers,[33] and, as such, subject to all the duties and responsibilities of common carriers at common law.[34]

An expressman carrying the baggage of a railway passenger from the depot to hotels and private houses is a common carrier, and is liable for the loss of baggage while in his care and custody.[35]

§ 8. Transportation and Forwarding Companies.—A transportation company, not owning or controlling any means of conveyance itself, but engaging on its own behalf in the business of transporting goods through the agency and over the lines of other carriers of its own selection and employment, is a common carrier, and subject to all the responsibilities attaching to that character.[36] Forwarding companies which undertake for hire to transport baggage from its starting point to its final destination, such transaction being within the ordinary course of their business, are common carriers within the meaning of the law.[37] Even if the expressed purpose of a forwarding company's business were material, its designation that it was a "forwarder" and "distributor" would be sufficient to estop it from claiming that it was a mere forwarder and not a common carrier.[38] A "forwarding merchant" or "forwarder" is one who ships or sends forward goods for others to their destina-

§ 9. Proprietors of Stage Coaches.—Proprietors of stage coaches are common carriers.[40]

§ 10. Proprietors of Omnibuses and Baggage Wagons.—The proprietor of a line of omnibuses and baggage wagons, engaged in the business of carrying for hire passengers and baggage, or either alone, between the hotels and depots of a city, is a common carrier.[41]

§ 11. Draymen and Truckmen.—Persons who are engaged in the business of transporting goods from place to place in a city, in drays or transfer wagons, may be common carriers.[42] Persons engaged in the business of general truckmen, making a specialty of moving heavy machinery, who keep a large number of trucks and horses, and employ the necessary help, are common carriers.[43] A wagoner who carries goods for hire, is responsible as a common carrier, though transportation is only an occasional and incidental employment.[44] A regular tariff of charges is not essential to create a truckman a

Carrying goods by means of ox team and slide.—One carrying goods, for hire, from place to place about town, as a common employment, by means of an ox team and slide, is a common carrier. Robertson v. Kennedy, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 430, 26 Am. Dec. 466.

One who, under a license so to do, hauls goods within the limits of a city for any person desiring his services, is a common carrier; and, while he can not be compelled to go beyond his territorial limits, yet, if he undertakes to do so, he is liable as a common carrier for the whole distance. common carrier.[45]

§ 12. Telegraph and Messenger Companies.—Telegraph companies resemble railroad companies and other common carriers, in that they are instruments of commerce, and in that they exercise a public employment, and are therefore bound to serve all customers alike, without discrimination. They have, doubtless, a duty to the public to receive, to the extent of their capacity, all messages clearly and intelligibly written, and to transmit them upon reasonable terms. But they are not common carriers. Their duties are different, and are performed in different ways; and they are not subject to the same liabilities.[46] In Massachusetts it has been held that a telegraph company, furnishing messengers for the delivery of packages, does not assume the liability of a common carrier, but only agrees that the messenger furnished shall be a suitable person for the work.[47] But in the District of Columbia it has been held that companies engaged in supplying messenger service to the public are to a certain extent common carriers, goods for hire between two places, were common carriers. Chevallier v. Straham, 2 Tex. 115, 47 Am. Dec. 639.

45. Regular tariff of charges not essential to create truckman a common carrier.—Judgment, 36 N. Y. S. 808, 15 Misc. Rep. 93, affirmed. Jackson Architectural Iron Works v. Hurlbut, 158 N. Y. 34, 52 N. E. 665, 70 Am. St. Rep. 432.

46. Status of telegraph companies.—Primrose v. Western Union Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. Ed. 883, 14 S. Ct. 1098; Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. Ed. 556; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 175 U. S. 91, 44 L. Ed. 84, 20 S. Ct. 33.

Telegraph companies are not public carriers in the strict sense of the term, yet on account of the public nature of their employment, they have in many cases been held to a very similar responsibility. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds Bros., 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715.

Although a telegraph company is not a common carrier, yet its relation with senders of messages over its lines is of a commercial nature, and contracts that the company shall not be liable for the negligence of its servants are affected, in some degree, by similar considerations. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 175 U. S. 91, 44 L. Ed. 84, 20 S. Ct. 33; Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. Ed. 556; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Primrose v. Western Union Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. Ed. 883, 14 S. Ct. 1098.

Telegraph companies, though not common carriers, are engaged in a business that is in its nature almost, if not quite, as important to the public as is that of carriers. Like common carriers they can not contract with their employers for exemption from liability for the consequences of their own negligence. But they may, by such contracts, or by their rules and regulations brought to the knowledge of their employers, limit the measure of their responsibility to a reasonable extent. Whether their rules are reasonable or unreasonable must be determined with reference to public policy, precisely as in the case of a carrier. Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 269, 22 L. Ed. 556; Primrose v. Western Union Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 38 L. Ed. 883, 14 S. Ct. 1098.

Although there is much analogy between the common carrier and the telegraph company, both are in the exercise of a quasi public occupation, and both have, by the public, conferred upon them valuable franchises, and both may, and do, invoke the high prerogative of exercising the state right of eminent domain. Still telegraph companies are not common carriers, nor are they insurers, either of the accurate transmission or the sure and prompt delivery of messages. They are liable, however, for losses consequent upon their negligence. Marr v. Western Union Tel. Co., 85 Tenn. 529, 536, 3 S. W. 496; Telegraph Co. v. Munford, 87 Tenn. 190, 10 S. W. 318. The knowledge of a messenger company that messengers sent out by it were sometimes employed to carry money does not render the company a common carrier, where the company exercises no control over the messenger during his employment by a patron. Haskell v. Boston Dist. Messenger Co., 190 Mass. 189, 76 N. E. 215, 2 L. R. A., N. S., 1091, 112 Am. St. Rep. 324.

Where a bill for rent was intrusted to a messenger furnished by a messenger company, and the amount collected by the messenger, the company did not become a common carrier and insurer of the bill and the money. Haskell v. Boston Dist. Messenger Co., 190 Mass. 189, 76 N. E. 215, 2 L. R. A., N. S., 1091, 112 Am. St. Rep. 324.

must serve impartially all who require their services, are liable on proof of negligence; and under some circumstances, and always by special contract, they may make themselves insurers.[48]

§ 13. Transfer and Storage Companies.—A transfer and storage company engaged in a business of warehousing goods and forwarding them for a compensation in car load lots is a common carrier, so as to make it liable as such for the destruction of the goods while in its warehouse.[49] So a company chartered to do a general warehouse and storage business, but engaging as well in moving household goods and advertising that business in a way to solicit custom from the general public, is a common carrier, notwithstanding it claims the right to select those whom it will serve, and its custom is to discriminate, accepting some and rejecting others as it may choose.[50]

§ 14. Livery Stable Keepers.—A livery stable keeper, who lets a conveyance for a special journey, and furnishes a driver therefor, is merely a private carrier for hire, and is bound only to exercise that degree of care and skill in the selection of a vehicle, team, and driver which a prudent man would bestow in such a matter, and is not liable for injuries caused to a person in the vehicle, occasioned by negligent driving.[51]

§ 15. Mail Contractors.—A contractor to carry the mail between a railroad station and the postoffice in a town is not a common carrier and owes a railroad mail clerk no further duty than the exercise of reasonable care.[52]

§ 16. Owners of Ships Carrying Goods for Hire.—By the settled law, in the absence of some valid agreement to the contrary, the owner of a general ship, carrying goods for hire, whether employed in internal, in coasting or in foreign commerce, is a common carrier.[53] But it is the business of carrying goods for others, not a single act, known to the consignor to be outside the usual employment, which fixes the liability of a common carrier.[54] Therefore, where the owner of a vessel keeps it for his own use, the mere fact that he hires it to another by a special agreement will not make him liable as a common carrier;[55] and where the master of a vessel, engaged chiefly in carrying naval stores takes in charge a box of jewelry, without including it in a bill of lading, and without any contract as to the price for carrying it, he is only liable as an ordinary bailee, and not as common carrier.[56] A boat used by its owners for their own purposes, and those of others who agree to pay certain rates for the transportation of their goods from one point to another, and which is not shown to have been held out as a common carrier, cannot be declared to be such, at the instance of one of the agreeing parties.[57] He who receives and forwards goods, assuming the expense of transportation, for which he is compensated by the owner, but having no concern in the vessel by which the goods are sent, nor any interest in the freight, is not a common carrier.[58] To make the owner of a vessel liable as a common carrier, it is not necessary that his trips should be regular between the same points, it being sufficient if he is engaged in carrying for others generally to and from any point.[59]

"An engagement to tow does not impose either an obligation to insure, or the liability of common carriers. The burden is always upon him who alleges the breach of such a contract to show either that there has been no attempt at performance, or that there has been negligence or unskillfulness to his injury in the performance. Unlike the case of common carriers, damage sustained by the tow does not ordinarily raise a presumption that the tug has been in fault. The contract requires no more than that he who undertakes to tow shall carry out his undertaking with that degree of caution and skill which prudent navigators usually employ in similar services." Plaintiffs were engaged in the business of towing boats on the Ohio river and its tributaries, but were not shown to have held themselves out to the public as ready to tow craft for all who might seek their services. They were not shown to have operated on a definite route or between established termini, and there was no evidence that the public looked to them as bound to carry without a special agreement, or that they ever intended to undertake to do so. Held, that they were not common carriers. Varble v. Bigley (Ky.), 14 Bush 698, 29 Am. Rep. 435.

§§ 19-24. Power to Control and Regulate in General—§ 19. Carriers in General.—The Legislature has full power to pass laws regulating the intrastate business of carriers; and, where not unconstitutional, the laws should be enforced.[1] Under the power accorded by constitutional enactment to regulate intrastate transportation, the legislature has authority to do anything necessary to the effectual exercise of the power conferred.[2] Such enactment should not be interpreted so as to render impotent or inoperative, but so as to preserve and make effective, the sovereign power of the state to regulate common carriers.[3] A constitutional provision giving the legislature full power to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination by common carriers, is not a grant of power to the legislature, nor is it a limitation upon the power of the legislature, but an express recognition by the constitution of a power existing in the legislative department of government.[4]

§ 20. Railroad Companies.—Railroad companies are common carriers, receiving from the state a delegation of a portion of its sovereign powers for the public good; and being public agents and, in the place and stead of the government, exercising public duties, they are, therefore, subject to the legislative and judicial authority to correct the abuse of their privileges and powers.[5] Within the limits of state and federal constitutional restrictions, they may be required by law to refrain from so using their property as to injure others, and by appropriate pains and penalties may be restrained from unjust discrimination and extortionate charges, compelled to observe precautionary measures against accident, and in other ways regulated for the public welfare.[6] The State may, by statute, require railroads to perform certain duties to the public and furnish proper and adequate facilities for the transportation of freight and passengers intrastate.[7] The police power is a fruitful source of legislative regulations of railroads for the public benefit.[8] A police regulation of a reasonable and proper

8. Prohibiting sale of tickets by persons not agents of carrier.—The New York statute, Laws 1897, c. 506, § 1, prohibiting the sale of passenger tickets by persons not agents of the carrier, is not valid as a police regulation of carriers as quasi public corporations. Order 50 N. Y. S. 56, 26 App. Div. 228, reversed. Tyroler v. Warden of City Prison, 157 N. Y. 116, 51 N. E. 1006, 43 L. R. A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763.

Nor is such act valid as a police regu-character can not be attacked on the ground that it imposes unnecessary burdens on the railroads affected by it.[9] An act regulating carriers as to the mode of transportation of the state militia is not an unlawful interference with the carrier's management of its business.[10] In many of the states the power of the legislature to regulate and control railroad companies is defined and limited by constitutional enactment.[11] The fact that the legislature has power to repeal the charter, and thus terminate the legal existence of a railroad company, does not validate an act which is neither necessary nor appropriate to carry into execution any valid power of the state over the conduct of the business of the lation of the manner in which the business of ticket brokerage may be conducted. Order 50 N. Y. S. 56, 26 App. Div. 228, reversed. Tyroler v. Warden of City Prison, 157 N. Y. 116, 51 N. E. 1006, 43 L. R. A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763.

The sale of a valid passenger ticket by a broker is not a fraud, on either the transportation company or the traveler, calling for protective legislation in the exercise of the police power, as attempted by Laws 1897, c. 506. Order 50 N. Y. S. 56, 26 App. Div. 228, reversed. Tyroler v. Warden of City Prison, 157 N. Y. 116, 51 N. E. 1006, 43 L. R. A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763.

But in Tennessee, it has been held that Acts 1905, p. 873, c. 410, prohibiting persons other than the authorized agent of common carriers to sell or deal in passenger tickets issued and sold below the standard schedule rate under contract with the original purchaser, entered on the ticket to the effect that the ticket was nontransferable and should be void in the hands of a person other than the original purchaser, was a valid exercise of the state's police power to prevent fraud and the depreciation of public morals. Samuelson v. State, 116 Tenn. 470, 95 S. W. 1012, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805.

Disposition of property not called for by consignee.—The proviso in the Minnesota statute, § 11, c. 149, Gen. Laws 1895, requiring railroads and transportation companies to turn over to a storage company or public warehouseman all property which the consignee fails to call for or receive within 30 days after notice of its arrival, is unconstitutional and void, not being a lawful exercise of the police power of the state. State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 68 Minn. 381, 71 N. W. 400, 38 L. R. A. 672, 64 Am. St. Rep. 482.

9. Reasonable police regulation not invalid on ground that it imposes unnecessary burdens.—Smith v. State, 100 Tenn. 494, 46 S. W. 566, 41 L. R. A. 432.

10. Regulation of mode of transportation of state militia.—Simpson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 137 N. W. 2, 118 Minn. 380, 137 N. W. 2, 41 L. R. A., N. S., 524.

11. Constitutional provisions defining and limiting power of legislature.—In Iowa, the legislature has power to prohibit the giving of free passes by common carriers for the general welfare, hence Acts 32d Gen. Assem., c. 112 (Code Supp. 1907, §§ 2157f-2157j), forbidding the giving of free passes except to certain employees, is constitutional. Schulz v. Parker (Iowa), 139 N. W. 173.

The Nebraska Constitution, art. 11, § 4, providing that the liability of railroads as common carriers shall not be limited, does not prohibit the legislature from increasing the common-law liability of common carriers, and the statute will not be declared void on complaint of the carrier because in some hypothetical case the law might work to the disadvantage of a shipper. Cram v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Neb. 607, 122 N. W. 31.

The constitution of Texas, art. 10, § 2, confers power upon the legislature to pass laws for the correction of all abuses of railroad franchises and business transacted in pursuance thereof, to regulate freight and passenger tariffs, and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion. Railroad Comm. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 351, 38 S. W. 750. See Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Harry & Bros., 63 Tex. 256, 259.

Under this provision it rests with the legislature to determine what constitute abuses and to fix penalties for their punishment. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Harry & Bros., 63 Tex. 256, 259.

The power to correct abuses is not restricted to such as are connected with freight and passenger tariffs. Railroad Comm. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 38 S. W. 750.

The word "abuses" as used in this amendment means "any improper use of a right or a privilege; as, abuse of a franchise." The language "the Legislature shall pass laws to correct abuses" is competent to express a command to the legislative department to pass laws for the correction of all abuses or improper uses of the franchises which had been granted or might be granted to railroads in this state, as well as all abuses connected with or growing out of business transacted in the exercise of such franchise. Railroad Comm. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 351, 38 S. W. 750.

It was left to the legislature's discretion to decide whether the abuse to be corrected should be declared a crime and railroad company.[12] The internal movement of freight is not freed from state control until after it has been finally released by the consignor to the carrier for transportation to a destination fixed beyond the state line, and such control is not lost until after the freight has been billed to its destination.[13] The surrender by a railway company of its special charter, to accept a general railroad law, before the state has made any attempt to regulate its tolls, frees the company from all liability to the state under a charter provision that when declared dividends shall aggregate a specified amount the legislature "may so regulate" the tolls that not more than a fixed percentage shall be divided annually on the capital employed, and the surplus profits shall be paid over to the state treasurer, and that, "if required," the corporation shall furnish the legislature a statement of expenditures; and such liability, therefore, can not be enforced by virtue of subsequent legislation, without impairing the rights of the railroad company under the federal constitution.[14]

§ 21. Express Companies.—Express companies operating over railroads exercising a public franchise in the state are equally subject to state control and regulation with the railroad companies over whose lines they operate within the limited field of business which they occupy.[15] A carrier by express is subject to legislative control though not organized as a corporation.[16]

§§ 22-24. Delegation of Power—§ 22. In General.—The legislature of a state cannot delegate the power to determine the form of the contracts which common carriers of persons or merchandise must make concerning transportation to private persons or corporations.[17]

§ 23. To Municipal Corporations.—A municipal ordinance prohibiting persons, unconnected with railroad trains, except passengers and other persons in the act of taking passage, from getting off or on engines or cars in the city limits, is authorized by a general charter power to pass all laws and ordinances that the municipal authorities may consider necessary for the preservation of the health, peace, prosperity and security of the citizens and which are not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the state.[18]

§ 24. To Commissions.—The legislature of a state may create a state railroad commission and delegate to it power to regulate railroad companies in their relations with the public.[19] In some states the power to so delegate its authority punished as such, or whether a civil injury, and be corrected by a civil action given by statute to the person whose rights had been violated, and allowing him to recover a fixed sum as a penalty, or as exemplary damages, far in excess of the actual damages suffered. is conferred on the legislature by the constitution. Some of these constitutional provisions have been interpreted by the courts.[20] A state constitution, if it sees fit, may unite legislative and judicial powers in a railroad commission. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States which forbids such action.[21] Railroad commissioners are statutory officers, and can exercise only such authority as is conferred by law, or by fair implication as incident to that expressly conferred.[22] The difficulty of making a specific enumeration of all the powers the legislature confers on railroad commissioners for the regulation of carriers renders it necessary to confer some power in general terms, and general powers given are intended to confer other powers than those enumerated.[23] Railroad commissions must exercise the power delegated to them within legal and constitutional limitations and in such a way as not to invade the legal and constitutional rights of others.[24] Whether other subjects of transportation are regulated by railroad commissioners is immaterial in considering the validity of regulations of particular subjects; the validity of one legislative regulation not being affected by the mere failure to regulate other matters within the legislative power and the choice of subjects of regulation being for the legislature, within its powers.[25] Some of the peculiar provisions of state constitutions and statutes conferring powers on railroad commissions have been interpreted by

A state corporation commission has no authority to make any rule or regulation in conflict with the federal constitution. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 102 Va. 599, 46 S. E. 911.

A state railroad commission, in prescribing a system of bookkeeping for intrastate business, does not conflict with the act of congress (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, § 20, 24 Stat. 379 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3169]) forbidding railroads to keep any other accounts than those required by the interstate commerce commission. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (Tex.), 150 S. While the Georgia statute, act of October 14, 1879, creating the railroad commission, is constitutional and the orders of the commissioners in pursuance of the authority there conferred, are valid and binding, their powers are not unlimited or beyond legal control by the proper authorities of the state. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Filson (Okla.), 128 Pac. 298.

Power to correct abuses irrespective of their connection with subject of tariffs.—The Texas statute, Rev. St., art. 4562, vesting in the railroad commission power to regulate freight and passenger tariffs, to correct abuses, and to prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in rates; and art. 4579, making it the duty of the commission to investigate complaints against railroad companies and to enforce all laws in reference to railroads—are an express delegation to the commission of power to correct abuses defined by the laws regulating railroads, irrespective of their connection with the subject of tariffs. Railroad Comm. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 38 S. W. 750.

Power to see that proper service is rendered.—The constitution of Louisiana, art. 284, which authorizes the state railroad commission to govern and regulate railroad freight and passenger tariffs and service, merely gives the commission power to see that proper service is rendered, and does not transfer from the legislature to the commission legislative powers. Whitehurst v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 131 La. 139, 59 So. 42.

Quality and reasonableness of intrastate service and compensation therefor—Michigan statute.—Questions relating to the quality and reasonableness of intrastate service and compensation therefor are primarily addressed to the railroad commission under Michigan Railroad Commission Act (Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, as amended by Pub. Acts 1911, No. 139), subject to review by the state courts. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Comm., 198 Fed. 1009.

A telephone is a facility and convenience within the constitution of Oklahoma, art. 9, § 18 (Bunn's Ed., § 222; Snyder's Ed., p. 238), empowering the corporation commission to require carriers to establish and maintain all such public service "facilities and conveniences" as may be reasonable and just. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 23 Okla. 210, 100 Pac. 11.

An order of the corporation commission requiring a carrier to install a telephone in its station in a town will not be disturbed where it appears that a telephone exchange is operated in the town, also that there is an exchange in an inland town of about three hundred population, and that the two towns are connected with a toll line, with free service to the subscribers of each exchange, and that such inland town receives all its freight by way of the station, and that the telephone would be of great convenience to the patrons of the station. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 23 Okla. 210, 100 Pac. 11.

Regulations as to passenger tickets—New Jersey statute.—An order by the Board of Public Utility Commissioners requiring tickets for intrastate commutation service, showing both termini and the same as to special intrastate rates, was within the jurisdiction of the Board under the New Jersey Public Utility Law (P. L. 1911, p. 374), if its determination as to the existence of regulations and practices that are unjust and unreasonable and the subjection of persons and localities to prejudice and disadvantage is sustained by proof. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Board, 83 N. J. L. 67, 83 Atl. 945.

An order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners requiring tickets showing both termini for intrastate commutation service or where special rates are granted is within the jurisdiction of the board where the companies refuse to sell or quote rates for the commutation or special rate tickets, except school tickets, to intrastate passengers to their termini, and require the passenger to take tickets reading to and from New York City. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Board, 83 N. J. L. 67, 83 Atl. 945.

Reciprocal demurrage, bills of lading, and penalty for delay in shipment.—The Mississippi statute, Ann. Code Miss. 1892, § 4291, provided that the railroad commission might fix all charges and supervise and regulate all persons, etc., who may own or operate express, telegraph, telephone, or sleeping car companies. Acts 1898, p. 97, c. 82, provided that all laws, acts, and parts of acts giving authority to the railroad commission to supervise common carriers shall also apply to car service associations or other associations governing or controlling cars or rolling stock and railroads at whatever place they do business in the state, and the same penalty fixed by law for disobeying the mandates or orders of the railroad commission shall apply to the car service associations, as well as associations of other characters. The provisions of the act of 1898 were incorporated in Code 1906, § 4843, as to the supervision of car service associations. Held, that the railroad commission had power to make rules as to reciprocal demurrage, and to make rule 10, adopted not, and subjects them to the regulation and control of the state board of railroad commissioners.[28]

June 8, 1904, and effective June 18, 1904, providing that, when cars are properly loaded and shipping instructions given, the railroad agent must immediately issue bills of lading therefor, and that if a car or cars are detained or held, and not carried within twenty-four hours thereafter, the railroad shall be liable to the shipper for the payment of $1 for each day or a fraction of a day that the car or cars are thus detained or held. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Keystone Lumber Co. (Miss.), 43 So. 605.

Time of shipment and transit and penalties.—The North Carolina statute, Laws 1903, p. 999, c. 590, § 3, providing that it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to omit to transport any goods received by it for shipment for a longer period than four days after receipt thereof, unless otherwise agreed on between the parties, or unless the same be destroyed, or to allow any such goods to remain at any intermediate point more than forty-eight hours, unless otherwise provided by the corporation commission, confers power on the commission to fix the time allowed as free time for intermediate points, and to make regulations as to the time of transit, but not to change the time allowed as free time at the point of shipment, nor to alter the penalties. Summers v. Southern R. Co., 138 N. C. 295, 50 S. E. 714.

Shipment of cotton.—Under the Texas statute, Rev. St., art. 4574, declaring it to be an unjust discrimination for any railroad to give undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or locality, or subject any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice, delay or disadvantage; and art. 4562, empowering the railroad commission to correct abuses—it is competent for such commission to prescribe regulations governing the shipment of cotton and the compressing of cotton in transit. Railroad Comm. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Tex. 340, 38 S. W. 750.

System of bookkeeping.—Under the Texas statute, Rev. St. 1895, art. 4571 (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 6667), the state railroad commission can not require an arbitrary division of expenses between freight and passenger traffic, but in prescribing a system of bookkeeping can only require the recording of facts. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (Tex.), 150 S. W. 878.

Notice and opportunity for hearing.—The Georgia statute, § 6 of the Railroad Commission Act of 1907 (Civil Code (1910), § 2663) contemplates that notice and an opportunity of a hearing be given to persons, railroads, or other corporations interested in the orders issued by the commission, and that provision may be made for such notice either by statute or rule of the commission. This section is to be construed to mean that the commission shall not issue a special order in a particular case, directed to a person or corporation, without first giving notice and an opportunity for hearing to the person or corporation so to be affected thereby. Wadley Southern R. Co. v. State, 137 Ga. 497, 73 S. E. 741.

Time when liability as carrier ends.—The South Carolina statute, Civ. Code 1902, § 3094, giving a railroad commission power to prescribe rates for storage of freight, and fixing the time after its arrival when storage charges shall begin, does not delegate to the commission the power to fix the time when the liability of the carrier ends, and that of warehouseman begins. Jones Bros. v. Southern R. Co., 76 S. C. 67, 56 S. E. 666.

Contracts for shipment of goods.—Under the Georgia statutes, the state railroad commission has no power to compel a railroad company to contract for the shipment of goods beyond its own line. State v. Wrightsville, etc., R. Co., 104 Ga. 437, 30 S. E. 891.

28. In South Dakota express companies controlled by railroad commissioners.—Platt v. LeCocq, 150 Fed. 391.

Rev. Civ. Code, S. D. 1903, § 1578, provides that a common carrier, if able to do so, must accept and carry whatever is offered him at a reasonable time and place of a kind that he undertakes or is accustomed to carry; and Pol. Code 1903, c. 7, § 437, prohibits a common carrier from subjecting any particular description of traffic to any prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever. Held, that a rule of an express company, providing that shipments of money would be received only during regular office hours if tendered before the departure of the last train on which the shipment could be made, which operated to require shipments of currency by a bank to be tendered on the day of the shipment before 6:30, 7, or 7:45 a. m., was unreasonable, and that the board of railroad commissioners had power to order the express company, so long as it held itself out as a common carrier of money, to receive same for transportation at all reasonable business hours of the day preceding the departure of trains at the hours specified. Platt v. LeCocq, 150 Fed. 391.

It was no defense to an express company's obligation to comply with the railroad commissioners' order that shippers of money could use the United States mails, and were therefore not prejudiced by the express company's rule, requiring presentation of money packages for ship-

§§ 25-28. Companies, Persons, or Instrumentalities Affected by Regulations—§ 25. In General.—No one can be compelled to engage in the business of a common carrier, but if he does so, he becomes subject to the duties imposed on common carriers.[29] In the constitution of California, art. 12, § 22, providing for a railroad commission to regulate the rates to be charged by transportation companies, the words "transportation companies" include individuals.[30]

§ 26. Railroad Companies.—A railroad company, accepting its charter subject to a constitutional provision prohibiting greater charges for shorter than for longer hauls, except when permitted by the railroad commission, is as much subject to the provisions for exoneration from that prohibition as to the prohibition itself, and can not claim that it has any implied contract exemption from these provisions by virtue of its charter and the consequent right to charge reasonable rates for its service.[31] A constitutional provision forbidding an officer of a company to engage in the business of transportation as a common carrier of freight or passengers over the works of the company, does not apply to the act of an officer of a railroad company in causing his own freight to be transported over the company's road.[32] When two railroad companies voluntarily enter into an agreement for joint rates, which covers all stations on their lines in the state, they virtually create a new and independent line, and become subject to the law preventing unjust discrimination and unreasonable exaction.[33] Where the railroad of one company is purchased by another railroad company, in pursuance of a statute authorizing the purchase, in the absence of any provision of law to the contrary, the road passes to the purchasing company subject to the same restrictions and limitations as to rates chargeable for transportation as attached to it in the hands of the vendor.[34]

§ 27. Street Railroad Companies.—Whether a street railroad company is subject to a particular law regulating railroad companies is to be determined by an interpretation of the terms of that law.[35] A railway company which perment at unreasonable hours. Platt v. LeCocq, 150 Fed. 391.

Where an express company held itself out as a common carrier of money, it was no defense to an order of the board of railroad commissioners, requiring the receipt of money packages for transportation during reasonable business hours of the day preceding actual shipment, that to obey such order would compel the express company to transact the business at a loss. Consolidation of railroad companies by lease, purchase, or otherwise.—For an interpretation of certain New Hampshire statutes, under which a number of railroad companies were consolidated by lease, purchase, or otherwise with the Boston and Maine Railroad; and which contained restrictions as to increase of rates by the companies so consolidated, see State v. Boston, etc., Railroad, 76 N. H. 146, 80 Atl. 858.

35. Street railroad companies.—Under Greater New York Charter, § 1538, a corporation operating a street railroad is not subject to Railroad Law, § 104. Braffett v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 204 N. Y. 440, 97 N. E. 888, affirming 137 App. Div. 899, 122 N. Y. S. 1122.

A street railroad corporation acquiring, under General Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565), § 79, the railroads of two companies, is not within Railroad Law, forms the service of an ordinary street railroad in a city under a franchise granted by the city is, as to such service, a street railroad, though it is also an interurban railroad engaging in carrying passengers beyond the limits of the city, and the fact that the State Railroad Commission has assumed jurisdiction over it does not prevent it from being subject to the franchise so far as it operates a system within the city.[36] Statutes limiting the fare to be charged by street railroad companies and requiring them to give transfers, have been interpreted by the courts to determine what companies and roads came within the scope of their provisions.[37]

§ 28. Express Companies.—In Iowa, under the express provisions of the Code,[38] laws relating to the transportation of property by railroad companies are applicable to express companies.[39] The statute of Indiana prescribing the duties of railroads with reference to intersecting lines[40] relates to the mere physical connection of the tracks, and has no application to express companies.[41]

§ 29. Licenses and Taxes.—The charters of some street railroad companies contain a provision requiring them to pay a license fee to the city in which they operate.[42] There are statutes in many of the states imposing a license or excise tax on express companies doing business in the state. Some of these statutes have been interpreted by the courts.[43] Power is generally dele-

42. Same annual fee as is now paid by other railroads.—The charter of a street-railroad company was made subject "to the payment to the city of the same license fee annually for each car run thereon as is now paid by other city railroads in said city." Two railroads there paid $50, one $20, and three nothing. Held, that $50 was payable. New York v. Broadway, etc., R. Co., 97 N. Y. 275.

43. Florida statute imposing license tax on express companies.—A Florida statute, Gen. Revenue Law June 2, 1893, c. 4115, prohibits one from engaging in or managing the pursuits mentioned therein without first taking out a state license, and paying the occupation tax and license prescribed therein, and authorizes counties, cities, and towns to impose further taxes. It specifies that express companies shall pay in cities of 15,000 inhabitants or more a $200 license tax, in cities of 10,000 to 15,000 $100, in cities of 5,000 to 10,000 $75, in cities of 3,000 to 5,000 inhabitants $50, in cities of 1,000 to 3,000 inhabitants $25, in towns of less than 1,000 and more than fifty inhabitants $10. The violation of the act is made a misdemeanor. Held, the act

Ohio statute imposing excise tax on express companies.—The amount paid to railroads for transportation of freight, as mentioned in the seventh subdivision of the second section of Act May 14, 1894 (91 Laws, 237), imposing an excise tax on express companies, is the amount paid for transportation of freight on business done wholly within Ohio. Adams Exp. Co. v. State, 55 O. St. 69, 44 N. E. 506.

44. Authority to impose license tax not applicable to foreign express companies.—The Kentucky statute, Act March 2, 1860, required foreign express companies doing business in the state to pay a license tax. The charter of the city of Lexington authorized the city to collect a license from express companies. Held, not to apply to foreign express companies. Adams Exp. Co. v. Lexington, 83 Ky. 657, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 716.

License taxes on express companies authorized by Florida statute.—A Florida statute, Gen. Revenue Law 1893, c. 4115, § 9, prohibits any person from engaging in any business without first securing a state license, and paying the occupation tax and license fee; authorizes counties and incorporated towns to impose further taxes of the same kind, not exceeding 50 per cent of the state tax when the business is carried on in such counties or towns; and directs that express companies doing business in the state shall pay in cities and villages of a specified population certain license taxes. Held, that any county may require of each company doing business within its limits to pay for doing business in any city or village in the county a license tax not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount paid the state for doing business in such city or village, and any incorporated city or town may also impose a tax for as much as 50 per cent of the state tax on any company doing business therein. Osborne v. State, 33 Fla. 162, 14 So. 588, 25 L. R. A. 120, 39 Am. St. Rep. 99.

The authority of a city under its charter to collect specific taxes on express companies doing business therein is not taken away as to the Southern Express Company by the provision of an act in relation to said company declaring "nor shall any municipal corporation levy any percentage tax upon the receipts of said company." City Council v. Shoemaker, 51 Ala. 114.

Tax authorized held to be an occupation tax.—A tax authorized by a city charter to be levied on "auctioneers, contractors, druggists, * * * omnibuses, carts, wagons and other vehicles used in the city for pay," in addition to the usual taxes assessed and collected on all property, is a tax on the occupation; and the fact that a defendant, who is the owner of a wagon, used it in one or two instances for hire will not alone support a conviction for his failure to procure a license for such wagon, but it must be shown that the vehicle is kept for hire or use for pay. Cheyenne v. O'Connell, 6 Wyo. 491, 46 Pac. 1088.

45. Ordinance not an attempt to impose additional tax on depot.—A city of the second class adopted an ordinance imposing an occupation tax "on each railroad corporation or company carrying or transporting freight or passengers to or from any point or place within the limits of this city, and to or from any point or place within the limits of this city and any point or place within the limits of this state, and having a depot or place of business within the limits of this city for receiving or discharging such passengers and receiving and delivering such freight. All interstate traffic commerce or business of such companies or corporations is hereby excepted and exempted from the levy of such tax." Held, that the ordinance was not an attempt to impose a tax on the depot of the complaining company, in addition to the tax arising from the general assessment of its property. York v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 56 Neb. 572, 76 N. W. 1065.

Ordinance held not to include hearses.—An ordinance imposing a license on "each vehicle used for passengers, not having an annual hack license," does not include hearses. Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa 401, 68 N. W. 795.

courts. A municipal ordinance imposing a license fee on a common carrier must, of course, to be enforceable, be a valid exercise of the delegated power.[46]

A statute providing that express companies shall pay a privilege tax to the state, and that no company which has paid such tax shall be liable to pay any other tax in the state, precludes a city from levying a license tax on an express company.[47] A railroad company's liability to pay a license tax required of a company running cars through a city, for transporting freight or passengers to or from it, is not affected by its not having an agent or office in the city.[48] A railroad company which organizes an express company and carries on a regular express business as a part of the business of the railroad company, under the management and control of its officers, and by its own agents, is subject to pay a privilege tax imposed by statute upon express companies.[49]

§ 30. Reports and Statements.—Where a state railroad commission is authorized to see that a railroad company does not charge rates in excess of the limits set by its charter, it is entitled to reports from such company.[50] The United States Express Company being a joint-stock company and possessing the qualities of a partnership, but being a common carrier, a state railroad commission has the legal right to exact from it as a common carrier information as to all of its property and business within the state, for the purpose of fixing its charges or otherwise regulating its business, but not as to its property out of the state, nor as to its interstate business.[51] Some of the peculiar provisions of statutes relating to reports and statements required to be made by common carriers have been interpreted by the courts.[52]

46. Ordinances imposing license fees held valid.—An ordinance of the township of Lakewood, prescribing that it shall not be lawful to engage in the business of carrying passengers without paying a license fee, and punishing the violation of such provision with a fine, and requiring licensed vehicles to stand at certain designated places, is valid. Combs v. Lakewood, 68 N. J. L. 582, 53 Atl. 697.

Under the Iowa statute, Code, § 463, authorizing cities to regulate, license, and tax all conveyances for hire, an ordinance imposing an annual license fee "for each two-horse wagon or team, $6; for each one-horse wagon, dray, or cart, $4; for each hack, carriage, coach or omnibus, $10;" and providing that "each vehicle used for passengers, not having an annual hack license, shall pay a license of $1 per day," is reasonable and valid. Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa 491, 68 N. W. 795.

An ordinance imposing annual license fees on the owners of conveyances run for hire, "for each two-horse wagon, $8; for each one-horse wagon, $5; * * * for each omnibus, $8; and for each hack or carriage, $10;" and which exempts from its operation vehicles bringing produce to market, and those owned by liverymen, but not kept on the street or other public place for hire—is a reasonable exercise of the power conferred on cities by the Iowa statute, Code, § 463, to regulate, license, and tax every description of conveyances for hire. Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa 401, 68 N. W. 795.

The word "carriage," as used in said ordinance, includes single-horse buggies; and an annual license may therefore be charged for them, not the per diem license provided in the last clause. Burlington v. Unterkircher, 99 Iowa 401, 68 N. W. 795.

Railroad Comm'rs v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 57 Fla. 526, 49 So. 39.

Under the Indiana statute, act of March 5, 1855 (Rev. St. 1876, p. 466), "declaring express companies to be common carriers," etc., it is the duty of the county recorder to procure the publication of §§ 31-34. Conduct of Business in General—§ 31. Common Carriers in General.—It is the business of a common carrier to carry persons and property for hire.[53] The carrier has a right to conduct such business according to law, free from the interference of strangers.[54] But though a discretion is allowed a common carrier in the discharge of its public duties, it must be exercised in good faith, within the limitations of the law, and with reasonable regard for the public welfare, and is subject to review and regulation.[55] A carrier may prescribe reasonable regulations for the delivery to its agents of property for transportation, but it can not impose unusual conditions on a shipper, or require him to undergo unusual expense in delivering his goods for transportation.[56] While a common carrier may not be bound by a contract which renders it incapable of performing its duties to the public, yet where the subject-matter of a contract is not foreign to the purposes of the corporation, but is within its authorized power, and is not forbidden by statute, nor otherwise illegal, it will not be nullified by the courts.[57]

Conduct of Business by Agents.—Agents of common carriers must exercise the same kind of judgment in the employer's business as if doing business for themselves, and what would convince them that a certain fact exists is notice to the carrier of the existence thereof, so that agents must act on knowledge, probabilities, information, and judgment and infer facts as men generally do in similar matters when acting for themselves.[58]

§ 32. Railroad Companies.—In the absence of charter or statutory provisions affecting its right, it is competent for a railroad company to determine for itself within what limits it will act as a common carrier, what business it will engage in, what means and methods of transportation it will employ, what goods it will carry, and between what points and under what circumstances and conditions it will receive the same, subject always to the limitation that it must act in good faith, reasonably, and not arbitrarily or capriciously, and without discrimination; doing for all under like circumstances what it does for any one.[59]

Right to make reasonable regulations.—A railroad company, has, unquestionably, the right to make reasonable regulations for conducting its business; and parties dealing with it must conform to such regulations. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 31, 30 Am. Rep. 98; Eddy v. Rider, 79 Tex. 53, 15 S. W. 113.

But such regulations can not be made and enforced if violative of the law, without liability to a person injured by their enforcement. Eddy v. Rider, 79 Tex. 53, 15 S. W. 113.

That a regulation of a railway company, that freight and passengers will be carried on its road in separate trains, is a reasonable regulation, can hardly be doubted by any one. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 31, 30 Am. Rep. 98.

Where railroad regulations are unnecessary and put shippers to delay and expense, the carrier may be liable. Donovan v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 64 Tex. 519.

The Texas statute, art. 4484, Sayles' Civ. Stats., gives to railway corporations "the right to regulate the time and manner in which passengers and property shall be transported," but it has never been thought that such regulations would be enforced by the courts except where they were reasonable, and whether or not they are in any case reasonable is a question to be determined according to all the circumstances of such case. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Currie, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 277, 76 S. W. 810, affirmed in 97 Tex. 648, no op.

It is the duty of a railroad company to provide reasonably adequate facilities to meet the present and prospective demands for the safety, comfort, and convenience of the public.[60] It may, in addition to the facilities and accommodations already furnished, be required to render a particular service that it is essentially its duty to render for the reasonable convenience of its patrons among the public, and to meet the reasonable requirements of the public service undertaken.[61] Contracts for the carriage of freight by railroad companies are subject to regulation under the law, and when a lawful regulation has been imposed the carrier can not destroy it by any printed form of contract required to be signed by shippers.[62] In all the states there are constitutional provisions or statutes regulating railroad companies in the conduct of their business, or providing for their regulation by commissions appointed for the purpose. Some of the specific regulations with which railroad companies have been required to comply have been construed by the courts.[63]

Management and running of trains.—Railroad companies may make reasonable regulations of their own for the management and running of their trains, or they may follow general customs in such management and running; which, when established, known, and acted on by the public, may impose upon the companies duties in reference to others, a breach of which, to their injury, might render such companies liable to damages. The facts involved in such regulations and customs, upon which duties would arise, not being matters known to the court, would have to be proved as other facts, where a breach of such duties might become the subject matter of a suit for damages. 63. Public service facilities and conveniences required under constitution of Oklahoma.—The provision in the constitution of Oklahoma, art. 9, § 18 (Bunn's Ed. § 222) relating to the duties of the corporation commission, and providing that it shall from time to time require transportation companies to maintain all "such public service facilities and conveniences as may be reasonable and just," means everything incident to the general, prompt, safe, and impartial performance of the duties to the public at large imposed by the state, in the proper exercise of its police power, on transportation companies. Sale of passenger tickets.—An order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners of New Jersey held not to require the establishment of a commutation service by railroads, but merely to require that tickets shall be sold for an existing service designating specifically the termini of the journey, and that the rates be quoted and filed. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Board, 83 N. J. L. 67, 83 Atl. 945.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Board, 83 N. J. L. 67, 83 Atl. 945.

The stopping of lumber in transit for treatment contemplated by Railroad Commissioners' Rule 15 A, prescribing the charge for switching cars of rough lumber consigned to and arriving at the city of Jacksonville from points in the state to any planing mill in the Jacksonville yards, and thence after lumber is dressed to any point in the same yards, is in the nature of a special privilege, which the carrier may concede, but which the shipper can not demand as a matter of right. Railroad Comm'rs v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 59 Fla. 612, 52 So. 4.

Prohibition against using road for street railroad purposes.—In the California statute, Act May 20, 1861, authorizing municipalities to grant to any railroad Maintenance of Warehouses.—A railroad company has no power, either express or implied, to maintain a regular public warehouse as an incident to its duty as public carrier;[64] and it can not be compelled to maintain such a warehouse, unless it has the power to act as a public warehouseman.[65]

When Regulations May Be Enforced Though Service Required Is Unremunerative.—Even though a particular duty of a railroad company, if enforced, would be in itself unremunerative and burdensome, such a result would be an incident to the service voluntarily undertaken, in consideration of the franchises permitted to be used for the public good, and the property rights of the carrier would not thereby be lawfully invaded, if the particular service is reasonably necessary for the public convenience, and the burden to the carrier has some fair relation to the benefits accruing to the public, and the burden of the particular service, considered with reference to the entire business of the carrier, does not in reality amount to a denial to the carrier of a reasonable compensation for the service rendered by it as an entirety.[66] If the performance of a particular useful, but nonessential, duty by a common carrier will as a part of a general public service contribute to the public convenience, the fact that the particular service must be rendered at a loss does not, in view of the nature of the duty required, excuse nonperformance; but the loss occasioned by the performance of a particular duty may be considered in determining the reasonableness of the order requiring the particular service to be rendered.[67] Where it appears that a particular service is a duty vitally necessary to the public, and its performance is essential in adequately rendering a general public service as a common carrier, the fact that the performance of the particular duty will be unremunerative will not in view of the nature of the duty to the public excuse nonperformance.[68] company the use of streets for the purpose of reaching an accessible point for a depot, the provision that no company availing itself of the act should use its road "for street railroad purposes, or for the purpose of carrying passengers for a consideration from one point to another in the same city," was inserted to prevent competition between railroad companies covered by the act and local street railways, and not for the purpose of giving the public at large the right to travel free on such railroad within the city limits. Illinois statute does not require maintenance of warehouses.—The Illinois statute, Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 114, § 3, requires railroad companies to transport grain in bulk, but there is nothing in the statute requiring them to maintain regular public warehouses. People v. Illinois Cent. R. If particular regulations are reasonably useful and expedient for the just requirements of the public service being performed by a common carrier, thereby making it a duty of the carrier to render the service, the regulations, if not illegal, may be enforced, even though the service required is not remunerative, unless it is made to clearly appear that the particular regulations are so unreasonable and arbitrary that their enforcement will operate to deny to the carrier a reasonable compensation for the entire service rendered by it. Railroad Comm'rs v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 62 Fla. 315, 57 So. 175.

Considerations in Determining Whether a Regulation Is Confiscatory.—In determining whether the burden of a particular regulation enforced by state authority is confiscatory and unlawful because it prevents a railroad company from receiving a reasonable compensation for the service rendered, taken as an entirety, the fair actual value of all the property and labor and management rightly used in rendering the service should be considered. The cost of reproduction of the property may be an element to be considered in ascertaining the real value of the property used, but it is not the value that is to be arbitrarily considered in determining what is a reasonable compensation for the service rendered as a whole by a common carrier.[69]

When Courts and Commissions Should Not Interfere to Modify Established Rules.—Courts and commissions should not interfere to modify established rules of transportation companies on account of trivial troubles and incidental inconveniences, nor unless clear injustice or the imminent threat of it has resulted therefrom.[70]

Discontinuance of a Train.—Though information necessary to determine the question whether a train should be discontinued is inaccessible to the railroad commissioners except through the railroad company, it does not relieve the commissioners of the duty to regulate trains, nor deprive them of any authority they have to acquire the necessary information.[71]

Railroad Companies Can Not Escape Duties by Surrendering Management and Control of Their Roads.—Railroad companies voluntarily assume duties to the public from which they cannot free themselves by surrendering the management and control of their roads to other persons, in the absence of a law permitting them to do so.[72]

§ 33. Business of Transmitting Money to Foreign Countries.—A statute requiring all persons, who add to their business of selling steamship or railroad tickets to or from foreign countries the business of receiving money for transmission to foreign countries, to give a bond, merely regulates the carrying on of the business of transmitting money to foreign countries and restricts the business by requiring a bond to prevent fraud and the commission of crime, and is valid as within the police power.[73]

§ 34. Hackmen and Draymen.—A municipal ordinance regulating the business of carrying passengers and freight for hire in hacks and other vehicles on the streets of the municipality must conform to the municipal charter and must not be unreasonable.[74]

§§ 35-95. Charges—§§ 35-84. In General—§§ 35-79. Power to Regulate—§ 35. In General.—The power to regulate and control the rates of carriers is within the police power of the state.[75] The legislature of a state has the power to prescribe and regulate the charges of a railroad company for the carriage of persons and merchandise within its limits, in the absence of a contract vesting in the company authority over those matters, subject to the limitation that the carriage is not required without reward, or upon conditions amounting to the taking of property for public use without just compensation; and that what is done does not amount to a regulation of foreign or interstate commerce.[76] The power thus to prescribe and regulate charges is in many of or detain" any "carriage, hack, or vehicle" used to carry passengers or freight for hire, on any of certain named streets, or in front of any public hotel in the city, except when actually engaged in receiving or delivering passengers or freight, is an unreasonable and oppressive and invalid exercise of the power given by a city charter to license, tax, and regulate hackmen, draymen, etc., and to regulate stands for their vehicles, and to prevent the incumbering of the streets with any vehicle whatsoever. Ex parte Battis, 40 Tex. Cr. App. 112, 48 S. W. 513, 43 L. R. A. 863, 76 Am. St. Rep. 708.

Ordinance held not void for unreasonableness.—Provisions in the city ordinance establishing a hack stand which locate such stand across a thoroughfare from a city railroad station, and at a distance of 50 feet from the sidewalk in front thereof, and which require the drivers to stay with their vehicles, and forbid them leaving such vehicles to solicit passengers or to assist customers to the vehicles, and which prohibit runners therefor on the thoroughfare or sidewalk, do not render the ordinance void for unreasonableness. Ex parte Vance, 42 Tex. Cr. App. 619, 62 S. W. 568.

79. Statute void for uncertainty.—Ky. St., § 816, providing that, if any railroad corporation shall charge or collect more than a just and reasonable rate of toll for the transportation of passengers or freight, it shall be guilty of extortion, and fixing a penalty therefor, is void for uncertainty, in that it fails to prescribe a standard as to what is just and reasonable, by which the carrier can regulate its conduct. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 99 Ky. 132, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 42, 35 S. W. 129, 33 L. R. A. 209, 59 Am. St. Rep. 457.

Statutes held not void for ambiguity or uncertainty.—Act May 2, 1873, § 1, which declares that any railroad company which shall charge or receive more than a fair and reasonable compensation shall be guilty of extortion, is not void for uncertainty in defining the offense, since, when construed in connection with the eighth section, which provides for the making by the railroad and warehouse commissioners of a schedule of reasonable maximum rates for each railroad in the state, it furnishes a uniform rule for the guidance of the railroads. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 37 N. E. 247, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278, 24 L. R. A. 141.

Basis of Power.—The power of a state to regulate railroad rates and charges arises from the fact that railroad companies are engaged in a public employment, affecting the public interest, and must be held to have accepted their rights, privileges and franchises subject to the condition that the government creating them or the government within whose limits they conduct their business, may by legislation protect the people against unreasonable charges for the services rendered by them.[80]

of freight was established by experts. Held, in an action to recover an overcharge, that the statute was not ambiguous or uncertain on the ground that it applied to the transportation of cars only, and not freight, nor was it uncertain on the ground that a car load is not a fixed quantity, since, while the capacity of cars differs, the load which each could carry was fixed and certain. Railroad companies are carriers for hire. They are incorporated as such, and given extraordinary powers, in order that they may better serve the public in that capacity. They are, therefore, engaged in a public employment affecting the public interest, and are subject to legislative control as to their rates of fare and freight, unless protected by their charters. Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 46 L. Ed. 298, 22 S. Ct. 95; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U. The incorporation of a railroad company by a state and the granting of special privileges to carry out the object of incorporation, more particularly the authority to exercise the state's right of eminent domain, and the obligation assumed by the acceptance of the charter to transport all persons and merchandise upon like conditions and for reasonable rates affect the property and employment with a public use and thus subject the business of the company to legislative control in the interest of the public. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Murphey, 116 Ga. 863, 43 S. E. 265, 60 L. R. A. 817, citing Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. Ed. 377, 9 S. Ct. 47.

Under the rule that the owner of property set apart to a public use impliedly agrees to be governed by such reasonable regulations as the public may adopt to promote the common convenience and general welfare, the state may enact reasonable regulations fixing the rates for transportation of freight and passengers. State v. Corvallis, etc., R. Co., 59 Ore. 450, 117 Pac. 980.

A railroad is a public highway, and none the less so because constructed and maintained through the agency of a corporation deriving its existence and powers from the state. Such a corporation was created for public purposes. It performs a function of the state. Its authority to exercise the right of eminent domain and to charge tolls was given primarily for the benefit of the public. It is under governmental control though such control must be exercised with due regard to the constitutional guarantees for the protection of its property. Olcott v. Supervisors (U. S.), 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. Ed. 382; Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. Ed. 496, 14 S. Ct. 594; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co., 135 U. S. 641, 34 L. Ed. 295, 10 S. Ct. 965. It can not, therefore, be admitted that a railroad corporation maintaining a highway under the authority of the state may fix its rates with a view solely to its own interests, and ignore the rights of the public. But the rights of the public would be ignored if rates for the transportation of persons or property on a railroad are exacted without reference to the fair value of the property used for the public or the fair value of the services rendered, but in order simply that the corporation may meet operating expenses, pay the interest on its obligations, and declare a dividend to stockholders. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 544, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

thing to the contrary in the charter or statute creating a railroad corporation, a state may reasonably regulate its rates and tariffs upon intrastate traffic, although it is incorporated under an act on congress.[81]

State Newly Admitted to Union.—Where an act of congress regulating the rates on a railroad in a territory provides that such regulations shall be in force until a state government shall exist in the territory, when such government shall be authorized to regulate the cost of transportation by the railroad company, upon the organization of the territory as a state and its admission to the Union, the rates fixed by the act of congress cease to be of force, and the power to regulate intrastate rates on the railroad passes into the control of the state, subject only to the constitutional rights of the railroad company.[82]

Railroads Incorporated in Several States.—Where a railroad running through more than one state is incorporated under the laws of each state through which it passes, it is, as to the state incorporating it, a domestic corporation, subject to the state laws not in conflict with the constitution of the United States, including state laws regulating freights and fares for business done exclusively within the state.[83]

Consolidated Company, Consisting of Domestic and Foreign Corporations.—Where domestic railroad corporations are consolidated with foreign corporations on terms which, in effect, require the consolidated company, when operating in the state to be subject to its laws, the state may legislate for the company within the state precisely as it could have legislated for its own original companies, if no consolidation had taken place.[84]

That Income Is Pledged to Secure Debts Does Not Preclude Regulation.—The state may limit the amount of charges by railroad companies for fares and freights, unless restrained by some contract in the charter, even though their income may have been pledged as security for the payment of obligations incurred upon the faith of the charter.[85]

Power to Declare What Shall Be a Reasonable Compensation or to Fix a Maximum Charge.—By the common law carriers or other persons exercising a public employment could not charge more than a reasonable compensation for their services, and it is within the power of the legislature to declare

The fact that before the power of regulation was exercised, the company pledged its income as security for the payment of debts incurred, and leased its road to a tenant that relied upon the earnings for the means of paying the stipulated rent, does not affect the validity of the regulation, as the company could neither grant nor pledge more than it had, and its pledgee or tenant took the property subject to the exercise by the state of the same powers of regulation which might have been exercised over the company itself. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94.

what shall be a reasonable compensation for such services, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable.[86] But a state can not compel a railroad company to contract with any individual or class for carriage at a charge less than the established or regular scale of fares.[87] In some states the legislature is expressly empowered by the constitution to fix maximum rates for railroad companies;[88] and some of the peculiar provisions of statutes fixing such maximum rates have been held to be constitutional.[89] Statutes fixing maximum railroad rates are not invalid because they have caused the discharge of many railroad employees.[90]

§§ 36-37. Delegation of Power—§ 36. To a Commission.—There can be no doubt of the general power of a state to regulate the fares and freights which may be charged and received by railroad or other carriers by means of a commission created for that purpose.[91] Such a commission is merely an admin-

Statute requiring railroad company to sell mileage tickets at a reduced rate.—The New York statute, Laws 1895, c. 1027, § 1, requiring railroad companies to sell 1,000-mile mileage tickets at a reduced rate, is not a valid exercise of the right of the state to fix maximum rates for transportation, but an arbitrary enactment in favor of those able or willing to purchase the reduced-rate ticket. Judgment, 15 App. Div. 251, 44 N. Y. S. 175, reversed. Beardsley v. New York, etc., R. Co., 162 N. Y. 230, 56 N. E. 488.

Statute fixing charge for carrying militia held constitutional.—The Minnesota statute, Laws 1909, c. 493 (Rev. Laws Supp. 1909, §§ 2007-32, 2007-33), requiring railroad companies to carry officers and men of the national guard under military orders at the rate of one cent per mile, held constitutional. Simpson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 118 Minn. 380, 137 N. W. 2, 41 L. R. A., N. S., 524.

88. Legislature empowered by constitution to fix maximum rates.—Under the Constitution of North Dakota, § 142, the legislature can prescribe maximum rates for the transportation by common carriers of commodities within the state, if they are reasonable. McCue v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 19 N. Dak. 45, 120 N. W. 869.

The constitution of Texas confers upon the legislature the right to fix railroad maximum rates, and relief from such rates must be obtained from the legislature, and not from the courts. State v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 81 Tex. 530, 17 S. W. 60.

89. Statutes fixing maximum rates held constitutional.—The New Jersey statute, Gen. Railroad Law 1903, § 38 (P. L. 1903, p. 665), providing that a railroad may charge such fare as it shall think reasonable, not exceeding three cents per mile, and not exceeding in the case of railroads under special charter three and one-half cents per mile, and providing for the sale of tickets limited as to time for less than the regular fare, is constitutional. Constitutionality of Statutes Creating Commissions.—While an act creating a railroad commission for the purpose of regulating rates is not invalid merely because it delegates such power to the commission,[94] or because it empowers the commission to establish joint through rates or tariffs over the lines of independent connecting roads,[95] all of its provisions must be certain and consistent,[96] and it must not attempt to make the rates fixed by the commission con-

The provisions of the constitution of Georgia requiring the legislature to pass laws regulating freight and passenger tariffs within the state, and regulations adopted by the railroad commission established by the statutes passed in pursuance thereof, administered subject to the limitation that the carriage can not be required without reward or upon conditions amounting to the taking of property for public use without just compensation, do not violate the constitution of the United States, but are within the powers of the state, and have full force as public law. "Much litigation has arisen in regard to railroad commissions. At first railroad companies contested the constitutionality of acts creating these commissions and conferring upon them the power to fix reasonable rates and to make reasonable rules and regulations. The most common ground of attack was that this was a delegation of legislative power. It is now firmly established by the decisions of the courts of this country, both state and federal, that such powers can be conferred without constituting an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power." Southern R. Co. v. Melton, 133 Ga. 277, 280, 65 S. E. 665.

The Mississippi act creating a commission and charging it with the duty of supervising railroads is not unconstitutional upon that ground alone. Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. Ed. 636, 6 S. Ct. 334.

95. Power to provide for regulation of joint through tariffs.—The Minnesota act of 1895, creating a railroad and warehouse commission and defining its duties is not invalid because it undertakes to authorize the commission to establish joint through rates or tariffs over the lines of independent connecting roads, and to apportion and divide the joint earnings. 97. Act must leave question of reasonableness of rates open to judicial inquiry.—The Minnesota act of March 7, 1887 (General laws of 1887, ch. 10), establishing a railroad and warehouse commission, as interpreted by the supreme court of that state, is unconstitutional in that it makes the rates established by the commission conclusive, and does not allow judicial inquiry into their reasonableness. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. Ed. 970, 10 S. Ct. 462, 702.

Consumers' League v. Colorado, etc., R. Co., 53 Colo. 54, 125 Pac. 577.

Florida.—By a contract between the S. A. L. Ry. Co. and the F. W. S. Ry. Co., the former agreed to furnish to the latter an equipment for its line of railway, to be operated by the officers of the former in connection with its own road, the latter company to pay for the use of the equipment the same rentals which the other company charged other lines for the use of similar equipments, the W. S. Co. to assume its portion of the salaries of the officers operating such road, the S. A. L. Co. agreeing to guaranty the payment of certain bonds issued by the other company, and to make good any deficiency in the operating expenses and fixed charges. Held, that the S. A. L. Co. controls and operates the other company, within the railroad commission law (Acts 1899, p. 78, c. 4700, §§ 3, 4), prohibiting any railroad from making unjust discrimination in its freight or passenger rates on its tracks, or on any railroad "which it has the right, license, or permission to use, operate, or control," so that the railroad commissioners had power, under § 6 (page 80) of said law, to make reasonable and just rates for freight and passenger tariffs, to be observed in the operation of the road under the terms of the contracts. Georgia.—A "joint rate" within the meaning of Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Acts 1878, p. 125), § 5, as amended by Acts 1889, p. 131, and Civ. Code 1895, § 2189, declaring that the railroad commissioners shall have power to make just and reasonable joint rates for all connecting railroads as to traffic passing from one road to the other, is a rate charged for the transportation of goods or passengers over connecting lines of two or more railroads and divided among them for the services rendered by each respectively. Hill v. Wadley Southern R. Co., 128 Ga. 705, 57 S. E. 795.

Where the railroad commissioners declared that a continuous mileage rate should apply to two connecting railroad companies, the stock and bonds of one of which were owned by the other, though each had its separate directors and was operated separately, applying the rate previously fixed for the owning company, such rate was a joint rate within the meaning of Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Acts of 1878, p. 125), § 5, as amended by Acts 1889, p. 131, and Civ. Code 1895, § 2189, declaring that the railroad commissioners shall have the power to make just and reasonable joint rates for all connecting railroads, and the action of the commissioners was not ipso facto illegal on the ground that it was not a joint rate and not authorized by the statute, if the rate so fixed was reasonable and just. Hill v. Wadley Southern R. Co., 128 Ga. 705, 57 S. E. 795.

A "joint rate" as authorized by Act Oct. 14, 1879 (Acts 1878, p. 125), § 5, as amended by the act of 1889 (Acts 1889, p. 131; Civ. Code 1895, § 2189), declaring that the railroad commissioners shall have power to make just and reasonable joint rates for all connecting railroads as to traffic passing from one road to the other, may be made by deducting some prescribed per cent from each of the local rates and adding together the two rates thus reduced, but such method is not exclusive. Hill v. Wadley Southern R. Co., 128 Ga. 705, 57 S. E. 795.

Illinois.—Under the act establishing the State Railroad and Warehouse Commission and defining its jurisdiction, it had jurisdiction as to the charges of common carriers for switching cars to industries on their own or other lines, regardless of whether it could compel service without compensation, or whether it could compel a carrier to allow its cars to leave its own tracks. East Side Packing Co. v. Vandalia R. Co., 258 Ill. 397, 101 N. E. 600.

Iowa.—Act Iowa, April 5, 1888, provides the hands of a commission power to make general maximum rates for all commodities between all points in the state is not to be implied, but must be given for the regulation of transportation charges by railroad companies, and for a board of commissioners to fix reasonable charges. Section 17 requires said board to make a schedule of maximum rates, which shall be deemed prima facie reasonable. Sections 18 and 20 provide that any person may complain that the charges made or published by any company are higher than those fixed by the schedule, or that the latter are unreasonably high, upon which the board shall investigate the complaint. The decision made thereon shall set out the maximum rates to be charged thereafter, and neither the decision nor the schedule therein contained shall be limited to the case complained of, but shall extend to all such rates between points in the state, and to whatever part of the line of said road within the state as may have been fairly within the scope of the investigation. Held, that the power to make a full schedule is not only conferred by § 17, but is given also by said other sections, in case a complaint has been made and investigated. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 38 Fed. 656.

Massachusetts.—The authority of the board of railroad commissioners under Pub. St., c. 112, §§ 192-194, is not to consider the general subject of rates, but to "ascertain at what rates facilities for the carriage of milk under contract or in large quantities are furnished by the railroad corporation," and to compare them with the tariff for the carriage of milk by the can, to fix rates by the can "fairly proportionate with such contract or large quantity rates." The order when made is to have the force and effect of a criminal statute, which calls for strictness and regularity in proceedings under it. Littlefield v. Fitchburg R. Co., 158 Mass. 1, 32 N. E. 859.

Michigan.—The legislature by enacting Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, permits carriers to charge reasonable and just rates for services performed and confers on the railroad commission the power to ascertain whether a rate is reasonable and just. Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Michigan R. Comm., 171 Mich. 325, 137 N. W. 329.

Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, regulating carriers, creating the railroad commission with power as authorized by § 8 to promulgate demurrage rules, and declaring in § 3 that the act shall apply to the transportation of "property between points within this state, and to the receiving, switching, delivering, storing, and handling of such property and to all charges connected therewith," limits the power of the commission to promulgate demurrage rules to cases where the property has been or is to be transported between points within the state, and demurrage rules adopted by the commission are limited to intrastate transportation. Ann Arbor R. Co. v. Michigan R. Comm., 163 Mich. 49, 127 N. W. 746.

Minnesota.—Under Gen. Laws 1887, c. 10, as amended by Laws 1891, c. 106, the state railroad and warehouse commission, when reducing rates on the complaint of any one that rates between certain points on a certain railroad are too high, may, for the purpose of preventing discrimination by its own acts, reduce the rates on the whole line or system. Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713.

Mississippi.—Act Miss. March 11, 1884, confers upon the railroad commission the power to control all rates for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise from points within the state to points without the state, and from points without to points within the state. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Sessions, 28 Fed. 592.

Missouri.—In Laws Mo. 1887 (Ex. Sess.), making it the duty of the railroad commissioners to see that schedules of rates are reasonable and just, and providing that they "may," on complaint of any person, or on their own motion, determine whether the schedule of rates adopted by any common carrier is reasonable and just, the word "may" must be construed as "shall," as the statute is intended to be mandatory. Winsor Coal Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 52 Fed. 716.

Oklahoma.—The corporation commission has the power, under Const., art. 9, § 18, to fix a reasonable charge to be paid by shippers to the railroad for the dipping of cattle brought above the quarantine line before delivery. Midland Valley R. Co. v. State, 35 Okla. 672, 130 Pac. 803.

Texas.—The railroad commission of Texas, under authority from the legislature, has power to fix railroad passenger rates not exceeding a maximum rate of three cents per mile, and may fix different rates for different carriers, subject to the constitutional restriction that it can not deny to one carrier the equal protection of the laws by prescribing for it an unreasonably low and confiscatory rate, while other carriers similarly situated are permitted to charge a higher rate. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Storey, 149 Fed. 499.

Virginia.—The constitution of Virginia, § 156, subsec. "b," declares that the state corporation commission shall have the power of regulating all transportation companies in relation to the performance of their public duties and charges therefor, and that the commission shall enforce such rates as may be reasonable. A transportation company, the business of which consisted of conducting a switch line and handling cars to and from industries with which it had established switching connecin language admitting no other reasonable construction.[99] A statute requiring the railroad commissioners to fix tables of maximum charges, is not to be extended by construction to authorize the fixing of such charges to points beyond the limits of the state.[1]

Regulations by Commission in Excess of Statutory Power.—Where a railroad commission after a hearing on specific complaint as to a rate on a particular commodity makes a general rate tariff for maximum rates on all commodities which is beyond its statutory power, the whole tariff falls, and the rate on the tariff on the particular commodity will not be separately sustained.[2]

Necessary Prerequisites to Regulations.—Where rate regulations of railroad commissioners are not necessarily proper as a matter of law, or the propriety of the regulation may depend on circumstances, there should be an investigation before the regulation is made.[3] Some of the statutes authorizing railroad commission to fix or adjust rates require the commission, before doing so, to give notice.[4] Under other statutes the commission is not authorized to adjust rates until a complaint has been made, and their action is limited to the rates complained of.[5]

tions, observed the usual custom of placing cars in position to be weighed on consignees' or shippers' individual track scales, which scale service was necessary to the due delivery of goods. Held, that the Corporation Commission had authority to fix the charges for placing the cars in position on such scales. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 103 Va. 289, 49 S. E. 39.

99. Power to make general maximum rates not implied.—Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 176, 53 L. Ed. 753, 29 S. Ct. 451 (construing Kentucky railroad commission act).

The fact that the legislature of a state gives to a railroad commission no power to raise rates, but only power to reduce rates found to be exorbitant after hearing on specific complaint, is an argument against construing the statute so as to give the commission power to fix maximum rates on all commodities. Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 53 L. Ed. 753, 29 S. Ct. 451.

Power to make a general schedule of maximum rates for the transportation of all commodities, upon all railroads, to and from all points within the state, upon a general and comprehensive complaint that rates are too high, or upon like information of the commission itself, is not conferred upon the Kentucky railroad commission by Act Ky. March 10, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 5, c. 2), authorizing it, upon complaint that the rates of any railway company are extortionate, or upon its own information, to fix a reasonable rate if, after hearing, it finds the rates extortionate. Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 53 L. Ed. 753, 29 S. Ct. 451; Siler v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 213 U. S. 199, 53 L. Ed. 760, 29 S. Ct. 458.

1. No implied power to fix charges to points out of state.—Merrill v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 63 N. H. 259, construing St. 1883, c. 101.

2. Regulations by commission in excess of statutory power.—Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 53 L. Ed. 753, 29 S. Ct. 451.

A particular rate on a specific commodity fixed by the Kentucky railroad commission will not, in order to sustain its validity, be separated from the general order fixing a general schedule of maximum rates for all commodities, upon all railroads, to and from all points within the state, where the specific order was made after a general complaint was filed and is itself a general order, and was made in the exercise of the unfounded assumption of the power under Act Ky. March 10, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 5, c. 2), to make a general tariff of rates. Siler v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 213 U. S. 175, 53 L. Ed. 753, 29 S. Ct. 451.

3. When investigation necessary before regulation is made.—Railroad Comm'rs v. Florida, etc., R. Co., 64 Fla. 112, 59 So. 385.

Before making a railroad rate order, the railroad commissioners should inquire into and consider the interests of all directly and substantially affected. Railroad Comm'rs v. Florida, etc., R. Co., 64 Fla. 112, 59 So. 385.

4. Notice must be given.—Under the Iowa statute, chapter 17, § 3, Acts 1890, authorizing commissioners to establish joint through rates, and providing that they shall be governed therein by the act of 1888, which requires notice in the fixing of rates, a joint through rate, adopted without notice, is void. State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 90 Iowa 594, 58 N. W. 1060.

5. No power to adjust rates of which no complaint has been made.—Under the Washington statute, § 3 of Act 1905, p. 147, c. 81, vesting the railroad commission with power upon complaint made "* * * after a full hearing to make any finding declaring any existing rate for the transportation of persons or property to be unreasonable, discriminatory or insuffi-

§ 37. To a Municipal Corporation.—Authority is sometimes conferred by statute or charter upon municipal corporations to prescribe or regulate the charges of carriers within the municipality.[6] An ordinance fixing a rate for hire of hacks, etc., and imposing fine or imprisonment for refusal to pay such rate, was within the legislative authority of a municipality authorized to regulate such conveyances.[7]

§§ 38-39. Classification of Railroads for Purposes of Regulation—§ 38. Right to Classify.—Since a uniform rate of charges for all railroad companies in the state might operate unjustly upon some, it is proper to provide in some way for an adaption of the rates to the circumstances of the different roads, and the general assembly may, in the exercise of its legislative discretion, do this by a system of classification.[8]

§ 39. Mode of Classification.—Whether the classification shall be according to the amount of passengers and freight carried, or of gross or net earnings, during a previous year, or according to the simpler and more constant test of the length of the line of the railroad, is a matter within the discretion of the legislature. If the same rule is applied to all railroads of the same class, there is no violation of the constitutional provision securing to all the equal protection of the laws.[9]

cient, * * * and to declare and order what shall be a just and reasonable rate * * * to be imposed, enforced, or performed or followed in the future in the place of that found to be objectionable," the railroad commission has no power, upon complaint as to certain rates, to adjust rates of which no complaint is made, nor to forbid railroad companies operating in the state from changing their existing tariffs not theretofore fixed by the commission, without the consent of the commission. Great Northern R. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (Wash.), 92 Pac. 457.

Since, under such section the commission has no power upon complaint made as to certain rates to adjust rates of which no complaint is made, a complaint, framed under such section, in which the commission allege that certain rates are fair, just, and reasonable, raises no issue which the railroad company must answer, and the commission can not adjust such rates. Great Northern R. Co. v. Railroad Comm. (Wash.), 92 Pac. 457.

An order of the railroad commission, changing commodity freight rates, is void, where no complaint has been made against the existing rates, and no hearing had thereon. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 52 Wash. 440, 100 Pac. 987.

6. Statutes authorizing limitation of rate to be charged by street railroad companies.—Under the Illinois statute, 1 Starr & C. Ann. St. (2d Ed.), pp. 689-715, art. 5, § 1 (City and Village Act April 10, 1872), adopted by the city of Chicago as its charter, as well as under former charters (Act Feb. 14, 1851, and Act Feb. 13, 1863), authorizing the city to regulate and prescribe the compensation of hackmen, cabmen, omnibus drivers, and "all others pursuing a like occupation," the city had power to enact Rev. Code Chicago, §§ 1723, 1725, limiting the rate of fare to be charged by street railway companies, inasmuch as the phrase "others pursuing a like occupation," when construed ejusdem generis, includes street railway companies. Chicago Union Tract. Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 65 N. E. 451, 59 L. R. A. 631.

Charter provision not authorizing municipality to fix rates of fare.—A provision in the charter of a city authorizing it to "pass all by-laws concerning carriages, wagons, carts," etc., "and every by-law, ordinance and regulation it may deem proper for the peace, health, order or good government of the city," does not authorize it to fix rates of fare. Old Colony Trust Co. v. Atlanta, 83 Fed. 39.

It is within the power of Atlantic City to pass ordinances regulating the business of omnibuses, automobiles, or locomobiles, and fixing the fares to be charged. Atlantic City v. Fonsler, 70 N. J. L. 125, 56 Atl. 119.

Classification according to amount of business.—The legislature, in the exercise of its power of regulating fares and freights, may classify the railroads according to the amount of the business which they have done or appear likely to do and fix their rates accordingly. Dow

§§ 40-72. Limitation of Power—§§ 40-67. Reasonableness of Regulations—§ 40. Regulations Must Be Reasonable.—The power of a state, either through its legislature or a commission, to regulate the rates of charge of common carriers on intrastate business, is subject to the limitation that such rates must be reasonable,[10] and afford just and reasonable compensation for the services performed[11] and for the use of the property devoted to the business, estimated at its fair value.[12] The rights of carriers and the public with respect

v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028.

Classification according to trackage.—A classification by statute according to the length of the several lines, with different rates for passengers for roads in each class, is valid. Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028.

Classification according to gross annual earnings per mile.—The statute of Illinois of April 15, 1871 (Illinois Laws of 1871, p. 640), which classified the railroads in the state according to their gross annual earnings per mile, and puts different limits on the compensation of the different classes per mile for carrying a passenger and his baggage, is constitutional and valid, in restricting to the limit of three cents a mile existing corporations, whose charters gave them power to make all by-laws, rules and regulations not repugnant to law, and giving their directors power to establish such rates of toll as they should by their by-laws determine. Ruggles v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 526, 27 L. Ed. 812, 2 S. Ct. 832; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 541, 27 L. Ed. 818, 2 S. Ct. 839; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. A statute regulating the rate for the carriage of passengers, by different classes of railroads, according to their gross earnings per mile, is not in conflict with art. 1, § 4, of the constitution of Iowa, which provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation," and "the general assembly shall not grant to any citizen, or class of citizens, privileges or immunities which upon the same terms shall not equally belong to all citizens." * * * "The statute divides the railroads of the state into classes, according to business, and establishes a maximum of rates for each of the classes. It operates uniformly on each class, this is all the constitution requires." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94.

Whether a rate for the carriage of goods and passengers by a railroad company fixed by the railroad commissioners is legal depends on whether it is reasonable and just or unreasonable and confiscatory. Hill v. Wadley Southern R. Co., 128 Ga. 705, 57 S. E. 795.

A state has no right to fix a rate unreasonably low, though it may prevent a railroad from fixing one unreasonably high. Southern Pac. Co. v. Board, 78 Fed. 236.

A corporation performing public services and the people financially interested in its business and affairs have rights that may not be invaded by legislative enactment in disregard of the fundamental guarantees for the protection of property, and regulations of rates to be valid must be reasonable. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 526, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

A grant to the legislature in the constitution of Nebraska of the power to establish maximum rates for the transportation of passengers and freight on railroads in that state has reference to "reasonable" maximum rates. It can not be admitted that the power granted may be exerted in derogation of rights secured by the constitution of the United States, or that the judiciary may not, when its jurisdiction is properly invoked, protect those rights. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 526, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

Though the public has an interest in the use of private property devoted to the railroad service, and the legislature may by statute limit the charges for such service, it can not reduce them below the point of fair remuneration. Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

12. Rates prescribed must afford reasonble compensation for use of property.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725.

Confiscatory orders.—In Wisconsin it has been held that "Confiscatory orders" are ordinarily, but not always, unlawful and unreasonable, and to be confiscatory an order of the railroad commission regulating rates, or charges must deprive the railroad of a fair return upon its property, and not merely reduce former rates or charges. Minneapolis, etc., R.

to rates are reciprocal. The carrier is entitled to ask a fair return on the value of its property it employs for the public convenience, and the public is entitled to demand that no more be exacted from it for the use of the public highway than the services rendered are reasonably worth.[13] Statutes fixing rates for transportation by carriers will not be held unconstitutional on the ground that they are unreasonable without the fullest disclosure of all material facts.[14] The reasonableness or unreasonableness of the particular provisions of statutes, commission orders and municipal ordinances, prescribing or regulating the rates to be charged by carriers for the carriage of passengers or freight, has, in a number of cases, been determined by the courts.[15]

While a carrier is entitled to adequate recompense for the service it performs, the individuals are entitled to a rate that they can reasonably afford to pay for the service they require. The company, on the one hand, has the right to derive a fair income from its investment, and the public, on the other hand, to have no more exacted than the services in themselves are worth. Puget Sound Elect. Railway v. Railroad Comm., 65 Wash. 75, 117 Pac. 739.

15. Statutes held unconstitutional as being confiscatory.—Act Ala. Feb. 14, 1907 (Acts 1907, p. 104), fixing passenger rates, and Act Nov. 23, 1907 (Acts Sp. Sess. 1907, pp. 91-159), known as the Eight Group Acts, relating to freight rates, held unconstitutional as to complainant railroad companies as confiscatory. Western Railway v. Railroad Comm., 197 Fed. 954.

The passenger rate act of Illinois of May 27, 1907, fixing maximum fares of two cents per mile, held confiscatory and unconstitutional, as applied to the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway Company of Illinois. Trust Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 199 Fed. 593.

Evidence insufficient to show statutory rates unconstitutional and confiscatory.—In suits to enjoin the enforcement of Act Nev. March 5, 1907 (St. Nev. 1907, p. 73, c. 44), creating a railroad commission and authorizing it to establish freight rates on intrastate business, not higher than those prescribed in a schedule of maximum rates, evidence considered, and, except in the case of one complainant, held insufficient to show that such maximum rates, if adopted and enforced would be unconstitutional as confiscatory. Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725.

Commission order held unreasonable and unjust.—Railroad commission order No. 553 of August 6, 1906, establishing freight rates for the hauling of sugar cane, held, under the evidence, to be unreasonable and unjust within Const. art. 284, conferring on the commission authority to adopt reasonable and just rates. Morgan's etc., Steamship Co. v. Railroad Comm., 127 La. 636, 53 So. 890.

Commission order held unreasonable and confiscatory.—Railroad Commission Order No. 976, passed February 26, 1909, establishing and reducing the rate on petroleum and its products in less than car load lots, held unreasonable and confiscatory. Louisiana, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 131 La. 387, 59 So. 820.

Rate fixed by commission held reasonable.—The rate fixed by the corporation commission of twenty-five cents per car for placing cars in position to be weighed on consignee's or shipper's individual track scales is reasonable. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 103 Va. 289, 49 S. E. 39.

One commission order held reasonable and another unreasonable.—Orders made by the railroad commission of Louisiana, fixing rates on gravel and sand in car loads, considered, and one held reasonable and valid, and another void as unreasonable. Thompson v. Railroad Comm., 198 Fed. 691.

Evidence not showing rate made by commission unreasonable and unjust.—Plaintiff in an action against the railroad commission does not, as required by the Texas statute, Rev. St. 1895, art. 4566, show that the freight rate on cotton made by it is unreasonable and unjust to him because there is no car rate, and because it is the same amount per one hundred pounds whether pressed to a density of forty pounds to the cubic foot, as shipped by him, or to a density of only twenty and one-half pounds, as shipped by others. Judgment, Railroad Comm. v. Weld (Tex. Civ. App.), 68 S. W. 1117, reversed. Railroad Comm. v. Weld, 96 Tex. 394, 73 S. W. 529.

Municipal regulation held unreasonable.—A municipal regulation extending the five cent fare limit of a street railroad

Rates May Be Valid as to Some Railroads Though Not Compensatory as to Others.—That state statutes fixing railroad rates are not enforceable as to particular railroads, because the rates as applied to such roads are not compensatory, does not render them invalid as to other roads.[16]

Right of Carrier to Increase Rates to Meet Changed Conditions.—A carrier has the right, if rates have been fixed too low in the past, to meet changed conditions by increasing them if the increase is reasonable, and a state statute, which denies it that right and forces it to continue in force rates which are unremunerative and confiscatory, is unconstitutional and void.[17]

Right to Change Rates Which Have Been Lowered to Meet an Exigency.—A railroad company has the right to change rates which to meet an exigency have been made so low as to be unremunerative when the necessity therefor has ceased to exist, and a statute which prohibits the increase of such rates is unconstitutional as confiscatory.[18]

Conclusiveness of Statutory Rate in Action for Freights.—A carrier can not recover for the transportation of property more than the maximum fixed by the legislature, by showing that the amount charged was no more than reasonable compensation for the services rendered.[19]

§§ 41-67. Mode of Determining Reasonableness—§ 41. That Carrier Has Performed Services for Rate Fixed Not Sole Criterion.—A freight rate fixed by a railroad commission with power to establish reasonable and just rates, can not be held just and reasonable solely because the carrier has performed services for the fixed rate.[20]

§§ 42-49. Carrier Entitled to Fair Return on Investment—§ 42. In General.—The basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction, must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public.[21] And, having regard to the fair value of the carrier's investment, the rates fixed must admit of its earning a compensation that under all the circumstances is just to it and to the public.[22] A carrier can not be compelled, by the held invalid for unreasonableness. East St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Belleville, 193 Fed. 95.

Ordinance held not unreasonable.—An ordinance permitting an omnibus driver to charge only ten cents for carrying a passenger, irrespective of the distance, is not unreasonable. Atlantic City v. Brown, 72 N. J. L. 207, 62 Atl. 428.

Whether an intrastate freight rate is reasonable or confiscatory depends on the valuation of the railroad company's property, the income derived from the rate, and the proportion between the two. Montana, etc., R. Co. v. Morley, 198 Fed. 991.

22. Return on investment must be just to carrier and to the public.—Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. Ed. 858, 19 S. Ct. 565; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that establishment of rates by a state commission, to transact its whole business at a loss, as rates which would so operate would be confiscatory.[23] And rates for railroad transportation are not unreasonable only when they amount to practical confiscation, nor are they necessarily reasonable when they allow any dividend, however small, but a railroad company is entitled to be reimbursed its charges and expenses, and to receive, besides, an adequate return upon the investment.[24] But rates charged by a common carrier can go no higher than the

which is employed for the public convenience. On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 547, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

Whether railroad rates prescribed by a state commission are reasonable involves a determination of the value of the property devoted to the public use to which the rates apply, the measure of a reasonable return on that value and whether the rates allowed to be charged are sufficient to that end. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Love, 177 Fed. 493.

The reasonableness of rates for the intrastate carriage of freight and passengers established by a state, as affecting a particular carrier, can not be determined alone from the kind or amount of business done by such carrier; the fact remaining, which must be considered, that it is entitled to earn a fair return on its investment, if it can be done without making the rates oppressive. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290.

Carrier entitled to reasonable profit on entire intrastate business.—While a railroad is not entitled to earn a profit on every mile of its road nor on every article carried by it, it is nevertheless entitled to earn a reasonable profit on its entire intrastate business. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, 155 Fed. 756.

A rate prescribed by a state railroad commission for the carriage of a particular commodity will not be held to be unreasonable, where it appears that it is more than the average rate received by the road for the carriage of all freight for the previous year. Seaboard, etc., Railway v. Ellis, 203 U. S. 261, 51 L. Ed. 175, 27 S. Ct. 109.

23. Carrier can not be compelled to transact its whole business at a loss.—Louisiana R., etc., Co. v. Railroad Comm., 131 La. 387, 59 So. 820.

In a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a carrier's schedule prepared by the board of railroad commissioners, a table was introduced in evidence showing the operating expenses of two of the roads affected for four years, and it appeared that, if the schedule as proposed had been in operation at that time, the business of the roads would have been done at an actual loss, and nothing left for a return on the value of the property. Held, that the rates of the commission were unreasonably low. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Keyes, 91 Fed. 47.

The constitution of Louisiana, art. 284, gives authority to the Railroad commission to adopt reasonable and just rates. Held, that the commission is authorized to make rates which are reasonable and just and no other, and no rate can be reasonable and just to a railroad company which is established safely upon the basis of the company's gross revenue, since gross revenue may be insufficient to meet expense and to yield a return upon invested capital. Morgan's, etc., Steamship Co. v. Railroad Comm., 127 La. 636, 53 So. 890.

24. Railroad company entitled to receive an adequate return upon investment.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Board, 78 Fed. 236.

If a railroad is not ill conceived, greater in extent than it should be, or unduly expensive in construction, and is operated wisely and economically, rates producing no more than a reasonable return on its fair value would not be unjust to any one. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Love, 177 Fed. 493.

Freight rates established by state authority are invalid as unreasonable and confiscating, if so low that a carrier can not earn a fair and reasonable return on the value of the property devoted to the service. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Lee, 199 Fed. 621.

The railroad commission established by the Michigan statute, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300, with power to fix reasonable and just rates, must consider the value of the property of the carrier employed for the public convenience, and give it a fair return on such value. Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Michigan R. Comm., 171 Mich. 325, 137 N. W. 329.

Under the Wisconsin Statute, Laws 1905, pp. 556, 559, c. 362, §§ 12, 14, requiring railroads to furnish adequate service, and that the charges and rates be reasonable, and permitting the railroad commission to fix reasonable rates, and § 16, permitting the railroad or other party in interest to have such orders reviewed in the circuit court, in an action against a commission to vacate an order on the ground that it is unlawful or unreasonable, in determining whether any order is unreasonable, the court must consider that every unnecessary burden imposed upon the railroad impairs its net receipts and diminishes the margin between its gross receipts and the amount sufficient service is reasonably worth to the public, even though charges so limited would fail to produce a fair return to the carrier upon its investment.[25] What constitutes a fair return to a carrier on its investment is a mixed question of law and fact.[26] In determining the question consideration should be given to the profits realized generally on similar investments in the locality of the one under consideration,[27] and to the legal rate of interest in the state.[28] That a road was to assure a fair return on the value of its property, plus the amount of its fixed charges and operating expenses, and that the rights of the public and of the railroad require that this margin should ordinarily not be exhausted or impaired by orders of the commission as fast as it accumulates. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 136 Wis. 146, 116 N. W. 905.

The Missouri statute, Act Feb. 27, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 170), establishing two cent passenger fares on intrastate railroads, and Act March 19, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 171), establishing maximum freight rates held confiscatory and unconstitutional on evidence showing that none of the roads doing business thereunder can earn to exceed 3 per cent net income on its state business, while as to some the business must be done at a loss. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hadley, 168 Fed. 317.

Sufficiency of evidence as to unreasonableness of rates.—A general averment in a bill that a tariff, as established, is unjust and unreasonable, is supported by the admitted facts that the road cost far more than the amount of the stock and bonds outstanding; that such stock and bonds represent money invested in its construction; that there has been no waste or mismanagement in the construction or operation; that supplies and labor have been purchased at the lowest possible price consistent with the successful operation of the road; that the rates voluntarily fixed by the company have been for 10 years steadily decreasing, until the aggregate decrease has been more than 50 per cent; that, under the rates thus voluntarily established, the stock, which represents two-fifths of the value, has never received anything in the way of dividends, and that for the last three years the earnings above operating expenses have been insufficient to pay the interest on the bonded debt, and that the proposed tariff, as enforced, will so diminish the earnings that they will not be able to pay one-half the interest on the bonded debt above the operating expenses; and such an averment, so supported, will, in the absence of any satisfactory showing to the contrary, sustain a finding that the proposed tariff is unjust and unreasonable. Reagan v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. Ed. 1014, 14 S. Ct. 1047.

25. Rates can go no higher than service is reasonably worth to public.—Puget Sound Elect. Railway v. Railroad Comm., 65 Wash. 75, 117 Pac. 739.

It does not necessarily follow that a schedule of maximum freight rates is confiscatory and unconstitutional because it fails to yield a reasonable return on the investment. Such rates must be reasonable not only to the company but also to the public, and the fact that they do not prove remunerative to a new road built through a sparsely settled country where there is at present little local business does not require the few people and the small business to pay such rates as will make the road immediately profitable to its stockholders. Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725.

Where the carrying of 25 per cent of the total number of passengers carried by a street railroad company under rates affecting only 10 per cent of the passenger revenue at a rate less than what would be an adequate return for the use of its property affords it a profit over the actual costs of moving the passenger and is the only rate the passenger can afford to pay, such a rate is a reasonable rate, both to the company and to the public. Puget Sound Elect. Railway v. Railroad Comm., 65 Wash. 75, 117 Pac. 739.

26. What constitutes a fair return a mixed question of law and fact.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Lee, 199 Fed. 621.

27. Ordinarily, the right to the rate of returns, realized generally on similar investments in the locality of the one under consideration, is deemed reasonable and fair, if the investor could earn it, and the rate is allowed on the amount actually invested in good faith, fictitious valuations being rejected. Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

28. Rate of profit allowable.—In determining whether passenger rates prescribed by the Pennsylvania statute, Act April 5, 1907 (P. L. 59), are unreasonable in so far as a particular carrier is concerned, the question is whether such rate will enable the carrier to earn a net income not less than the legal rate of interest after paying fixed charges and operating expenses, maintaining the plant, and providing a suitable sinking fund for the payment of debts and a fair profit to the owners of the property. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Philadelphia County, 220 Pa. 100, 68 Atl. 676.

Railroads in Alabama are entitled to earn a net profit of 8 per cent on the value of the property employed by them in intrastate business, so long as the business is done without discrimination and built without expectation of an immediate realization of a fair return on the investment does not justify disallowance of such return if it can be earned without exaction of unreasonable rates.[29]

Rate on a Particular Commodity.—A reduced rate on a particular commodity is not reasonable, if established without regard to whether it will pay the cost of the service, or yield a fair return to the carrier on the capital invested.[30]

§§ 43-49. Mode of Determining Value of Property or Investment—§ 43. In General.—In order to ascertain the fair value of the property used by the carrier, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses, are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case.[31] To ascer-at reasonable rates. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 196 Fed. 800.

And a schedule of rates fixed by law which will not permit them to earn such return is confiscatory and unconstitutional. Western Railway v. Railroad Comm., 197 Fed. 954.

Railroad companies in Arkansas held entitled to earn an income of 6 per cent per annum on the value of their property employed in intrastate business, computed on the basis of the assessed valuation of such property, and from the earnings of a prosperous year to reserve a surplus of 1.5 per cent in addition; and the rates established by the Arkansas railroad commission and the two-cent passenger law of February 9, 1907 (Acts Ark. 1907, p. 10), held confiscatory as to such companies, and their enforcement enjoined. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290.

In Minnesota it has been held that where the evidence shows that the rates, as reduced by the state railroad and warehouse commission, would produce 2½ per cent net income on the cost of reproducing the terminals, and 5 per cent net income on the cost of reproducing the rest of the road, the same is a fairly liberal income. Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713.

In a case in the United States circuit court in Missouri it was held that railroad property, properly built and managed, is entitled to earn an annual income of 6 per cent on its fair valuation, and a statute fixing rates under which it can not make such income is confiscatory and unconstitutional. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hadley, 168 Fed. 317.

29. Immaterial that immediate realization of a fair return was not expected.—Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

30. Rate on a particular commodity.—Louisiana R., etc., Co. v. Railroad Comm., 131 La. 387, 59 So. 820.

A reduced rate upon a particular commodity transported by a carrier is not reasonable and just within the constitution of Louisiana, art. 284, giving the railroad commission power to adopt reasonable and just rates when it is established without regard to whether the existing rate is high or low, as compared with rates on other commodities, and without regard to whether it will pay the cost of the services rendered or yield a fair return to the carrier upon capital invested. Morgan's, etc., Steamship Co. v. Railroad Comm., 127 La. 636, 53 So. 890.

While a statute of a state requiring a railroad company to transport a particular commodity within the state for less than cost does not involve the taking of property without due process of law, within the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the United States constitution, so long as the railroad company obtains a fair revenue from the whole of its intrastate business, it does not follow that such a rate, to be unreasonable and unjust, within Const., art. 284, giving authority to the railroad commission to fix reasonable and just rates for railroads, must also be obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment. Morgan's, etc., Steamship Co. v. Railroad Comm., 127 La. 636, 53 So. 890.

But it has been held that the proper test as to whether rates fixed for transporting coal are reasonable is not whether the rate fixed is sufficiently high to enable the carrier to earn a fair compensation, but whether, under such rates, it will be enabled from its total freight receipts on all its intrastate traffic to earn a sum, above operating expenses reasonably necessary for such traffic, sufficient to yield a fair and reasonable profit upon its investment. McCue v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 19 N. Dak. 45, 120 N. W. 869.

31. Mode of determining value of property. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

In estimating the value of the property of a railroad company for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of rates fixed by a state, neither the market

tain the value of a railroad to determine the validity of a rate regulating statute, the most reliable test is the cost of reproduction of the road when the statute was enacted taking the value of the road at that time without regard to what may have been its value when constructed.[32] Courts, in determining whether a rate for freight charges fixed by state authority is reasonable, can not assume that the cost of reproduction of a line of railway, or that the present, as compared with the original, cost of construction, is the amount of stock and bonds outstanding, or that it is what the road has cost up to the time of the trial.[33] The assessed valuation of the property of a carrier is entitled to great weight in determining the value of the property employed for the establishment of rates.[34] The value of a railroad, like that of any other business property, may be a matter of growth; and its location, good will, and established business are elements to be considered in determining such value.[35]

§ 44. Fictitious Capitalization or Excessive Bonded Debt.—If a railroad corporation has bonded its property for an amount that exceeds its fair value, or if its capitalization is largely fictitious, it may not impose upon the public the burden of such increased rates as may be required for the purpose of realizing profits upon such excessive valuation or fictitious capitalization; and the apparent value of the property and franchises used by the corporation, as represented by its stocks, bonds and obligations, is not alone to be considered when determining the rates that may be reasonably charged.[36]

§ 45. Sworn Return of Value of Property Made for Purposes of Taxation.—A sworn return of the value of a line of railroad, made to the state value of its stocks and bonds, the cost of construction, nor the cost of reproduction of the property is absolutely controlling, but each should be regarded as a fact tending to show fair value, and, if one only of such facts is shown, it may be assumed that it represents such value. Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725.

32. Cost of reproduction most reliable test of value.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 196 Fed. 800. Compare Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Fed. 683.

In the valuation of the property of a railroad company for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of a state statute regulating rates, as affecting such property, a fundamental and generally controlling inquiry is the cost of reproducing the property in its existing condition at the time of the inquiry. Western Railway v. Railroad Comm., 197 Fed. 954.

In Minnesota it has been held that the question whether the rates for transportation fixed by the state railroad and warehouse commission are unreasonable and confiscatory is determined by ascertaining what, under all the circumstances, is a reasonable income on the cost of reproducing the road at the present time. Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 69 Minn. 353, 72 N. W. 713.

Evidence of a greater value than the assessed value must be shown by a carrier when it attacks rates fixed by the railroad commission created by the Michigan statute, Pub. Acts 1909, No. 300. Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Michigan R. Comm., 171 Mich. 325, 137 N. W. 329.

35. Location, good will, and established business.—Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 90 Fed. 683.

Circumstances not warranting consideration of value as a going concern.—But where a railroad company, owning a monopoly of transportation between certain points, the tonnage of which consisted largely of coal transported from the mines to a junction with a transcontinental line, had never been able to pay interest on its bonds, had accumulated only a very limited equipment, and had not prospered to any material extent, it was not entitled to an addition to its reproductive value in determining the reasonableness of a freight rate for added value as a going concern. Montana, etc., R. Co. v. Morley, 198 Fed. 991.

36. Fictitious capitalization or excessive bonded indebtedness.—Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

A bonded debt of a railroad is neither a complete nor accurate criterion of the value of the property for the ascertainment of the reasonable or confiscatory character of intrastate freight rates. Montana, etc., R. Co. v. Morley, 198 Fed. 991.

authorities for purposes of taxation by an officer of the company, is evidence of the value of the property, to be considered in determining the reasonableness of rates or charges fixed by the state for the carriage of passengers or freight, but is not conclusive on the company for the latter purpose, and does not estop it to show that the actual cost of reproducing the property would be much greater than the value so given.[37]

§ 46. Value of Franchise.—In valuing the property of a railroad company for the purpose of determining the validity of a state statute regulating rates, the value of the company's franchise is to be included, and, where the state by its tax commission has placed a value on such franchise for taxation purposes, it may fairly be taken by the court as a basis for its finding.[38]

§ 47. Consolidated Corporation—Value of Assets of Constituent Corporations.—The valuation placed by a consolidated street railroad corporation on the assets of the constituent corporations will not bind the railway commission in estimating the valuation upon which the corporation should earn an income, or in fixing the price the carrier may charge for transporting passengers.[39]

§ 48. Part of Railroad within State to Be Regarded in Its Relation to Part without State.—In the case of a railroad system extending into or through two or more states, the part within a state, the value of which is to be determined upon an issue as to the reasonableness of rates therein, should be regarded in its relation to the whole, and consideration given to the influence upon that value of property outside the state employed in aid of all its transportation business.[40]

§ 49. Road Purchased at Foreclosure Sale and Reorganized.—Where a road was purchased at a foreclosure sale and reorganized, the fact that the rates fixed will not pay a fair return on the original cost of the investment does not show them to be unreasonable, there being no evidence to show the cost of the investment to the persons purchasing and reorganizing it.[41]

§ 50. Carrier Entitled to Earn Interest upon a Valid Bonded Debt.—The interest upon a valid bonded debt of a railroad company, contracted in a

41. Road purchased at foreclosure sale and reorganized.—Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028.

A state statute (Arkansas Act of April 4, 1887) restricting the rate for carrying passengers to three cents a mile is not shown to be invalid because of the unreasonableness of its provisions, as applied to a railroad bought under a foreclosure sale and reorganized, by the admitted facts that with the same traffic that the road has, and charging for transportation at the rate of three cents per mile, the net yearly income will pay less than 1½ per cent on the original cost of the road, and only a little more than 2 per cent of the amount of its bonded debt, there being no evidence whatever as to how much money the bonds cost, or as to the amount of the capital stock of the corporation as reorganized, or as to the sum paid for the road at its purchase under the foreclosure. It can not be presumed that the price paid at the sale under the decree of foreclosure equalled the original cost of the road, or the amount of outstanding bonded debt, and without any proof of the sum invested by the reorganized corporation the court has no means, even if it would under any circumstances have the power, of determining that the rate of three cents a mile is unreasonable. Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028.

careful, economical, and honest administration of its business, constitutes a fixed charge, which the company is entitled to earn before its net earnings above operating expenses can be considered as dividends, which are subject to regulation or reduction in the discretion of the legislature.[42]

§ 51. Ascertaining Cost of Doing Business or of Operating Road.—As the reasonableness of a schedule of rates for local business of a railroad company must be determined by a comparison between the gross receipts and the cost of doing the business, it can not be determined until the cost of doing the business is ascertained.[43] In ascertaining the cost of operating a railroad, with reference to determining the reasonableness of rates, the expenses of operation are not to be strictly limited to the cost of running trains, excluding all betterments.[44] When estimating the cost of operating a railway per ton of freight per mile of carriage, for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of a tariff of rates fixed by a state railroad and warehouse commission, it is error to take into consideration an amount of the earnings which has been appropriated and paid out as dividends on stock shares of such railway.[45]

§§ 52-54. Consideration of Net Earnings in Determining Reasonableness of Rates Prescribed—§ 52. Net Earnings Must Be Sufficient to Pay Fair Return on Investment.—In fixing the rates of a carrier, regard must be had to the net earnings, and these must be sufficient, under the proposed schedule, to pay a fair return on the carrier's investment.[46] But a schedule of railroad rates established by state authority is not unreasonably low as to a particular road because it will not enable the company to accumulate from its net earnings a sinking fund for the payment of its indebtedness.[47]

Upon a bill to restrain the enforcement of a schedule of rates for the carriage of passengers and freight published by the railroad commission of a state, the court in reaching its conclusion proceeded upon the theory that the comparison of the actual gross receipts of the company from the business within the state with those which it would have received if the rates which it prescribed had been in force was sufficient to determine the question of the reasonableness of the rates. It was held that this was error; that the question of expenses incurred in producing the gross receipts should have been taken into account and a balance struck between the two and the net earnings ascertained. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Tompkins, 176 U. S. 167, 44 L. Ed. 417, 20 S. Ct. 336.

The Nebraska statute, Act April 12, 1893 (Laws 1893, p. 164, c. 24), prescribing local freight rates on railroads, which reduces such rates 29½ per cent, is invalid where the rates prescribed are such, as to companies operating roads within the state, and doing an interstate business, that there would be no net earnings from transportation of freight if such rates were applied to all their business. Ames v. Union Pac. R. Co., 64 Fed. 165.

Where the business of a railroad company within a state is efficiently, economically, and honestly conducted, and its operating expenses are no greater than such management requires, and the net earnings of its lines within the state, above operating expenses, both from local and through business, are less than half the amount required to pay the interest on the mortgage debt upon lines within the state, the local earnings at the same time being insufficient to pay half of the proportion of such interest justly chargeable thereon, a state regulation reducing the rates it is permitted to charge on local business, the effect of which will be to materially decrease its net earnings, is unreasonable and unjust and a violation of its constitutional rights. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 110 Fed. 473.

47. Carrier not entitled to accumulate sinking fund from net earnings.—Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Storey, 149 Fed. 499.

§ 53. Mode of Computing Net Earnings and What They Include.—In computing the net income of a railroad company, for the purpose of determining whether the rates prescribed by the state are reasonable or confiscatory, the intrastate business of the company is justly chargeable with its proper proportion of the expense incurred by the company in maintaining agents in various parts of the country to solicit business.[48] In making such computation net earnings must be held to include earnings applied to the purchase of additional equipment and other improvements,[49] and the fair rental value of the dining room, saloon, check stand, etc., privileges in a passenger station, although the carrier grants such privileges for a merely nominal rental.[50] In computing the net earnings, sums paid out by the carrier for injuries to persons may properly be included in operating expenses.[51] In computing the net earnings from its intrastate business miscellaneous earnings and expenses, not directly attributable to either intrastate or interstate business, may properly be apportioned between the two on the basis of the earnings from each source.[52]

§ 54. Earnings of Entire Road to Be Regarded.—A carrier can not claim the right to earn a net profit from every mile, section or other part into which the road may be divided, nor attack as unjust a regulation which fixes a rate at which some such part would be unremunerative, as it would be practically impossible to ascertain in what proportion the several parts should share with others in the expenses and receipts in which they participated.[53] To the extent that the question of injustice is to be determined by the effects of an act fixing the rate upon the earnings of the company, the earnings of the entire line must be estimated as against all its legitimate expenses under the operation of the act within the limits of the state.[54] A state railroad commission may reduce the freight upon a particular article, provided the company is able to earn a fair profit upon its entire business, and the burden of proof is upon it to impeach the action of the commission in this particular.[55]

54. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gill, 156 U. S. 649, 665, 39 L. Ed. 567, 15 S. Ct. 484.

The reasonableness of a passenger rate of a certain amount per mile fixed by the legislature must in the case of a railroad company be determined by its effect on the net earnings of the company on its entire line within the state, and not by its effect on any subdivision, even though it was once a separate road. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gill, 156 U. S. 649, 39 L. Ed. 567, 15 S. Ct. 484, affirming 54 Ark. 101, 15 S. W. 18.

55. Freight may be reduced upon particular article if entire business earns fair profit.—Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 46 L. Ed. 1151, 22 S. Ct. 900.

The fact that if rates upon all goods carried were fixed at the amount imposed by the commission upon coal in carloads the road would not pay its operating expenses does not show that the rate fixed by the commission is unreasonable. It may well be that the existing rates upon other merchandise, which are not disturbed by the commission, may be sufficient to earn large profits to the company, though it may earn little or nothing upon coal in carload lots. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 46 L. Ed. 1151, 22 S. Ct. 900.

A rate fixed by a railroad commission on a certain article can not be held to be unreasonable where there is no evidence from which a reasonable deduction can be made as to the cost of transporting such commodity, the amount of such commodity carried, or the effect which the rate will have on the carrier's income. Seaboard, etc., Railway v. Ellis, 203 U. S. 261, 51 L. Ed. 175, 27 S. Ct. 109.

But in Louisiana it has been held that though when the railroad commission establishes general rates affecting the entire intrastate business of a railroad company, the revenue derived from that business can be considered in determining whether such rates are reasonable and just within Const., art. 284, giving such commission authority to establish just and reasonable rates, yet where the rates are fixed on a particular commodity, the question is whether they produce a revenue, in the first place, sufficient to pay the actual cost of the service rendered, and, in the next place, sufficient to yield a fair return in the proportion that the business of handling such commodity bears to the whole intrastate business upon the capital employed, a possible exception existing where the carrier handles both the raw and manufactured material, and the loss on the one haul may be made good by the gain on the other, the whole constituting one and the same business. Morgan's, etc., Steamship Co. v. Railroad Comm., 127 La. 636, 53 So. 890.

§ 55. Interstate Business to Be Disregarded.—The reasonableness or unreasonableness of rates prescribed by a state for the transportation of persons and property wholly within its limits must be determined without reference to the interstate business done by the carrier, or to the profits derived from it.[56] The state can not justify unreasonably low rates for domestic transportation, considered alone, upon the ground that the carrier is earning large profits on its interstate business, over which, so far as rates are concerned, the state has no control. Nor can the carrier justify unreasonably high rates on domestic business upon the ground that it will be able only in that way to meet losses on its interstate business.[57] But the carrier's earnings or losses from interstate commerce may be considered in determining the proportion of the value of the property assignable to local business and for other purposes.[58]

And in Texas it has been held that where a railroad company attacking the reasonableness of the rate on lumber as fixed by the railroad commission showed that the revenue derived from hauling lumber at such rate was not sufficient to pay the cost of transportation, the rate was unreasonable, though a railroad company can not select an unimportant article and attack the rate prescribed for that as unreasonable for that reason. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 102 Tex. 338, 113 S. W. 741, 116 S. W. 795.

56. Interstate business and profits derived therefrom to be disregarded.—Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Keyes, 91 Fed. 47; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 196 Fed. 800; In re Arkansas R. Rates, 163 Fed. 141; State v. Seaboard, etc., Railway, 48 Fla. 129, 37 So. 314, affirmed in 203 U. S. 261, 51 L. Ed. 175, 27 S. Ct. 109; Morgan's etc., Steamship Co. v. Railroad Comm., 127 La. 636, 53 So. 890.

In determining the reasonableness of local rates, the interstate traffic which orignates or terminates in the state can not be divided upon a mileage basis, and such portion thereof as is done within the state be held subject to state control and considered in fixing rates. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Keyes, 91 Fed. 47.

The basis of all calculations as to reasonableness of rates charged by a railroad must be the fair value of the property, and as to rates for transportation of persons and property within the limits of the state, the reasonableness of such rates must be based on the value of the property devoted to domestic commerce, without reference to the value of the property devoted to interstate commerce. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 155 Fed. 792.

But in Michigan it has been held that under Act No. 90, Pub. Acts 1891, providing for fixing the rates for transportation of passengers on railroads, it is competent for the railroad commissioner, in fixing such rates, to include in the computation the amount of the interstate fares earned by that portion of the road lying within the state. Osborn v. Wabash R. Co., 126 Mich. 113, 85 N. W. 466.

57. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

"So far as rates of transportation are concerned, domestic business should not be made to bear the losses on interstate business, nor the latter the losses on domestic business. It is only rates for the transportation of persons and property between points within the state that the state can prescribe; and when it undertakes to prescribe rates not to be exceeded by the carrier, it must do so with reference exclusively to what is just and reasonable, as between the carrier and the public, in respect of domestic business. The argument that a railroad line is an entirety; that its income goes into, and its expenses are provided for, out of a common fund; and that its capitalization is on its entire line, within and without the state, can have no application where the state is without authority over rates on the entire line, and can only deal with local rates and make such regulations as are necessary to give just compensation on local business." Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

58. Purposes for which earnings or losses from interstate commerce may be considered.—State v. Seaboard, etc., Railway, 48 Fla. 129, 37 So. 314; S. C., 48 Fla. 152, 37 So. 658. Affirmed Seaboard, etc., Railway v. Ellis, 203 U. S. 261, 51 L. Ed. 175, 27 S. Ct. 109.

§ 56. Economic Factors and Natural Advantages of Localities May Be Considered.—A railroad commission, in fixing its schedule of rates, may consider any economic factor which may influence freight transportation, and may also consider the natural advantages of localities, and may justify a classification of commodity rates in localities, excepting rates between designated points from the general classification; and, where such exception is made, the presumption is in favor of the reasonableness of the classification, and the burden is on the railroad company to prove that it is illegal.[59] The circumstances of each railroad and each market or locality must determine the rates of toll properly to be allowed for the stopping of a commodity in transit for treatment, since while the carrier is entitled to receive some compensation beyond the mere cost of such service, the cost thereof may be greater or less in one city than another.[60]

§ 57. Equality of Rates for Like Service.—The state may require equality of rates where the conditions are the same, and an order of a railroad commission, which, in effect, makes rates equal, is valid.[61] An order of a railroad commission fixing rates on one road only, is not invalid, where the effect of such order is to equalize rates.[62] But in considering the reasonableness of a rate for the carriage of freight, a railroad commission and the courts are justified in taking into consideration what is known as "commercial necessity," namely, the application of principles, when fixing rates, which are forced upon common carriers by various conditions and circumstances and are in common practice among them—a business policy which actuates and influences the carriers themselves to disregard a rule of strict comparison and strict equality as between bulk, or weight, or value, as well as distance of carriage.[63]

§ 58. Adoption of Rates Given by Carrier to Certain Shippers.—Even if a state may not compel a railroad company to do business at a loss and conceding that a railroad company may insist, as against the power of the state, upon the right to establish such rates as will afford reasonable compensation for the services rendered, yet when it voluntarily establishes local rates for some shippers, it can not resist the power of the state to enforce the same rates for all. The state may insist upon equality as between all its citizens, and that equality can not be defeated in respect to any local shipments by arrangements made with or to favor outside companies.[64]

Whenever, under the guise or pretense of a rebilling rate, some merchants are given a low local rate, the commission is justified in making that rate the rate for all. It is not bound to inquire whether it furnishes adequate return to the railway company, for the state may insist upon equality, to be enforced under the same conditions against all who perform a public or quasi public service. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Mississippi R. Comm., 203 U. S. 496, 51 L. Ed. 289, 27 S. Ct. 163.

When voluntarily the Vicksburg company established a local rate of 3½ per cent from Vicksburg to Meridian for those who had within 90 days made a shipment over the Shreveport road, it estopped itself from complaining of an order making that rate applicable to all shipments, no matter whence they arose, and in favor of all merchants, whether those transporting over the Shreveport road or not. § 59. Accessibility of a Place to High Seas as Affecting Rates.—Though a shipping center be accessible to the high seas, it should neither be entitled to any favorable indulgence in the matter of railroad rates, nor the object of adverse discrimination on that account.[65]

§ 60. Betterments and Replacements Should Be Considered.—State authorities, in fixing rates to be charged by railroads, should take into consideration betterments and replacements made necessary by the growth of traffic, such as replacing wooden by iron bridges, and similar expenditures beyond ordinary repairs, which must be met from the gross earnings.[66]

§ 61. Passenger Traffic Considered as Separate and Independent from Freight Traffic.—In determining whether the passenger rates prescribed by statute are unjust as to a particular carrier, the passenger traffic of the road should be considered as a separate and independent subject from the freight traffic.[67]

§ 62. Revenue That Has Been Derived from Rate under Consideration.—Where a freight rate has been made for the future and a reasonable time has passed during which it has been applicable, the revenue derived therefrom should be regarded in determining whether it is remunerative or confiscatory.[68]

§ 63. Effect of Several Sovereignties Being Interested.—If, by the scope of the operations of a railroad company, several sovereignties are interested, the special insistence of the officers of one should not be permitted to cast an undue burden on the others. The factors common to all, affecting the reasonableness of rates, should be equitably dealt with and adjusted; and this, though the local rates of a single state are alone in questions.[69]

§§ 64-65. Apportioning Value of Property and Expenses—§ 64. Necessity for Apportionment.—To determine whether a rate regulating statute is reasonable as to a particular company, it is necessary to ascertain the value of all its property devoted to its business as carrier in the state, and to apportion such value between its interstate and intrastate business.[70]

A railroad company may properly charge its returns with an annual sum to provide for depreciation and replacement, and have such sum allowed in any determination of what is a proper return upon its investment, to be approximated in fixing its rates of carriage, but it can not make the traffic of a future year bear all the burdens of the deterioration of past years, since each year should carry the burden of its own wear and tear, so that, when renewals become necessary, the burden is equally borne by all contributing features. Where the same property, labor, and management are used at the same time by a common carrier in interstate and intrastate commerce, the value of the property and labor and management used should be properly apportioned in deter-

§ 65. Method of Apportionment.—While the authorities are not entirely in accord as to the proper method of apportioning the value of the property and the expenses of a railroad company engaged in both intrastate and interstate business for the purpose of determining whether rates on intrastate business established by a state are reasonable or confiscatory with respect to such company, the weight of authority would seem to support the rule that the revenue or gross earnings basis is the best and most equitable mode of apportionment, making a proper allowance for the greater cost of the intrastate business.[71] The revenue train mileage basis used by railroads in apportioning common operating expenses between their freight and passenger business, while concededly only an approximation, would seem to be the most satisfactory for making such apportionment for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of a state statute fixing passenger fares.[72]

§ 66. Line of Railroad Operated in Connection with Other Lines.—The fact that a line of railroad is operated in connection with other lines owned by the same company, but under separate charters, whereby the earnings of such line are increased and its operating expenses reduced, does not prevent its being considered as a separate and independent line for the purpose of determining the reasonableness of rates thereon, fixed by the state; full consideration of the joint operation being given when the road is credited for the increased business and reduced expenses.[73]

On an issue as to whether railroad rates on intrastate business established by a state are reasonable or confiscatory with respect to a railroad company doing both intrastate and interstate business, the proportion of the entire value of the property of the company in the state which is devoted to the intrastate business, and on which it is entitled to earn a fair return from such business, may fairly be determined on the basis of the earnings, by taking the same proportion of the entire value that the intrastate earnings bear to the entire earnings in the state from both intrastate and interstate business. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290.

On an issue as to whether railroad rates on intrastate business established by a state are reasonable or confiscatory with respect to a company doing both intrastate and interstate business, the expense of doing the intrastate business can not properly be computed alone on the basis of the earnings from such business as compared with the total earnings from both classes; but other factors should be taken into consideration, such as the comparative rates received for and expense of handling each class, the kind of traffic forming the bulk of each, especially where the interstate business is largely in the carriage of grain and similar commodities paying a low rate, which forms but a small part of local shipments and other matters which under the particular circumstances affect the question. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290.

In apportioning the cost of maintaining the way and structures of a railroad between its intrastate and interstate business, on an issue as to the reasonableness of intrastate rates established by a state, there seems no fairer basis than the earnings from the two classes of business; while, on the other hand the cost of locomotive and car maintenance which should be charged to each class of business can be more nearly approximated by using the car mile basis. In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290.

In determining the reasonableness of freight and passenger rates established by a state on intrastate railroad traffic, as applied to a railroad doing both interstate and intrastate business, the difference in the cost of handling each kind of business as related to the earnings from each should be considered, and in apportioning the total expenses between the two kinds of business the best method is to make the division on the basis of the relative earnings from each class of business. § 67. Mode of Arriving at Effect of Statutes Reducing Rates.—One of the most satisfactory modes of arriving at the effect on the revenues of corporations of statutes reducing rates is to take the gross and net income for the preceding years, if it be probable that the business will continue in substantially the same volume and at the same cost, and compare the results of prior years under the prior laws and the results which would have been effected if the reduced rates had been applied to such business.[74] To ascertain whether the reduced rates would be harmful or beneficial, the court may, in case of doubt, order them tested by actual operation; but such experiments are never justifiable where the facts presented show only a moderate income under the former law and a strong probability of scant earnings or deficiency under the reduced rates.[75]

§ 68. Due Process of Law.—A railroad corporation is a person within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States declaring that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law,[76] and under pretense of regulating fares and freights, the state can not do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property without due process of law.[77] If the rates are fixed at an insufficient amount,[78] or without judicial investigation,[79] the company is deprived of the lawful use of its property, and

As the public power to regulate railways and the private right of ownership of such property coexist and do not the one destroy the other, it has been settled that the right of ownership of railway property like other property rights finds protection in constitutional guarantees, and, therefore, wherever the power of regulation is exerted in such an arbitrary and unreasonable way as to cause it to be in effect not a regulation but an infringement upon the right of ownership, such an exertion of power is void because repugnant to the due process and equal protection clauses of the fourteenth amendment. Where a railroad commission arbitrarily fixes rates of fare and freight, in respect to which the company is given no opportunity to be heard, and which are thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself, without due process of law and in violation of the constitution. But general statutes regulating the use of railroads in a state, or fixing maximum rates of charges for transportation, when not forbidden by charter contracts, do not necessarily deprive a corporation owning or operating a railroad within the state of its property without due process of law.[80]

Requiring Sale of Thousand Mile Tickets.—An act requiring carriers to keep on sale at their principal ticket offices thousand mile tickets, and fixing a sum to be charged therefor, and providing that such tickets shall be good for a certain time after issuance, is invalid as taking property without due process of law.[81] The fact that a railroad company has voluntarily sold one thousand mile

Mode of determining whether rates prescribed are unconstitutional.—The question of whether the rates prescribed by a city ordinance limiting the fare to be charged by street railway companies are so low as to constitute a deprivation of property without due process of law can not be determined by a consideration of the earnings of a portion only of the lines of a street railway company, but only by estimating the earnings of the entire line as against the expenses of the entire line. "Regulations for maximum rates for present transportation of persons or property bear no resemblance to those which assume to provide for the purchase of tickets in quantities at a lower than the general rate, and to provide that they shall be good for years to come. The act of the Michigan legislature, No. 90 of the year 1891, amending the general railroad law, provided as follows: "That one thousand mile tickets shall be kept for sale at the principal ticket offices of all railroad companies in this state or carrying on business partly within and partly without the limits of the state, at a price not exceeding twenty dollars in the lower Peninsula and twenty-five dollars in the upper Peninsula. Such one thousand mile tickets may be made non-transferable, but whenever required by the purchaser they shall be issued in the names of the purchaser, his wife and children, designating the name of each on such ticket, and in case such ticket is presented by any other than the person or persons named thereon, the conductor may take it up and collect fare, and thereupon such one thousand mile ticket shall be forfeited to the railroad company. Each one thousand mile ticket shall be valid for two years only after date of purchase, and in case it is not wholly used within the time, the company issuing the same shall redeem the unused portion thereof, if presented by the purchaser for redemption within thirty days after the expiration of such time, and shall on such redemption be entitled to charge three cents per mile for the portion thereof used." It was held that the act was void as taking property without due process of law. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. Ed. 858, 19 S. Ct. 565.

In New York it has been held that a statute, Laws 1895, p. 961, c. 1027, as amended by Laws 1896, p. 758, c. 835, Laws 1897, p. 622, c. 484, and Laws 1898, p. 1326, c. 577, providing that any corporation operating a railroad in the state, the lines of which exceed 100 miles in length, shall issue mileage tickets for either 1,000 or 500 miles, which shall entitle the holder thereof, or any member of his family, to travel thereon, was unconstitutional and inoperative as to corporations formed prior to the enactment, but constitutional as to corporations organized subsequent thereto. Judgment, 113 App. Div. 894, 98 N. Y. S. 1109, reversed. Parish v. Ulster, etc., R. Co., 192 N. Y. 353, 85 N. E. 153.

tickets, good for a year from the time of their sale, does not of itself authorize the legislature to require the road so to do, nor furnish a standard by which to measure the reasonableness of a statute requiring the company to sell one thousand mile tickets at rates less than the regular rates, and to be valid for two years.[82]

§ 69. Equal Protection of Laws.—Corporations are persons within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States providing that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws,[83] and a regulation of rates which in effect denies a railroad company the equal protection of the laws is invalid.[84] A state enactment, or regulations made under the authority of a state enactment, establishing rates for the transportation of persons or property by railroad that will not admit of the carrier earning such compensation as under all the circumstances is just to it and to the public, would deny to it the equal protection of the laws, and would therefore be repugnant to the fourteenth amendment of the constitution.[85] But general statutes regulating the use of railroads in a state or fixing the maximum rates of charges for transportation, when not forbidden by charter contracts, do not necessarily take away from the corporation the equal protection of the laws.[86]

Requiring Sale of Thousand Mile Tickets.—An act requiring carriers to keep at their principal ticket offices thousand mile tickets, and fixing a sum to be charged therefor, and providing that such tickets shall be good for a certain time after issuance, is invalid as depriving the carrier of the equal protection of the law.[87]

Necessity for Adequate Security Where Passengers Are Required to Be Carried before Fares Have Been Paid in Money.—If it be assumed that, under the power to regulate the fares of common carriers of passengers, the Legislature can require the passengers to be carried before the fares have been paid in money, the security for the ultimate payment of the fares in money ought to be as certain as that required when private property is taken for public uses, and a statute which does not provide adequate security is unconstitutional.[89]

ble regulations for the government of public service corporations, and to that end may fix a reasonable maximum rate for the transportation of passengers, it can not arbitrarily fix a maximum passenger rate of two cents a mile on mileage books of five hundred miles or over and require the carrier always to keep the same on sale to all who apply therefor, and to redeem them at a later period than they have heretofore redeemed mileage books. Such legislation is class legislation, and it is not for the protection of all the people, but of the favored few. It discriminates in favor of the wholesale buyer, and also invades the right of the carrier to conduct and manage his own affairs. It denies to the carrier the equal protection of the laws, and so is unconstitutional. Attorney General v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 106 Va. 61, 55 S. E. 572.

Under pretense of regulating fares and freights, the state can not require a railroad corporation to carry persons or property without reward; neither can it do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property for public use without just compensation. Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. Ed. 636, 6 S. Ct. 334; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 154 U. Under Act June 7, 1887 (Railroad Commission Act), authorizing the railroad commissioners to prescribe reasonable and just rates of freight and passenger transportation, the enforcement of a tariff of rates which will not pay the expenses of operating the railroad is an abuse of the discretion given to the commissioners, and amounts to taking the company's property without just compensation. Pensacola, etc., R. Co. v. State, 25 Fla. 310, 5 So. 833, 3 L. R. A. 661.

The act of Nebraska of 1893, entitled "An act to regulate railroads, to classify freights, to fix reasonable maximum rates to be charged for the transportation of freights upon each of the railroads in the state of Nebraska, and to provide penalties for the violation of this act," is void as taking private property without due compensation, and its enforcement may be enjoined. Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. Ed. 819, 18 S. Ct. 418.

89. Necessity for adequate security where passengers are required to be carried before fares have been paid in money.—Attorney General v. Old Colony R. Co., 160 Mass. 62, 35 N. E. 252, 22 L. R. A. 112.

90. Discrimination against carrier in favor of certain individuals.—Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. Ed. 858, 19 S. Ct. 565.

The power of the legislature to enact general laws regarding a company and its affairs does not include the power to compel it to make an exception in favor of some particular class in the community and to carry the members of that class at a less sum than it has the right to charge for those who are not fortunate enough to be members thereof. This is not a reasonable regulation. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 43 L. Ed. 858, 19 S. Ct. 565.

§ 72. Limitations upon Power of a Municipality to Reduce Street Railroad Fares.—The power of a municipality to reduce street railroad fares is subject to the limitations (1) that there is reasonable need on the part of the public, considering the nature and extent of the service, of lower rates and better terms than those existing; (2) that the rates and terms fixed by the ordinance are not clearly unreasonable, in view of all the conditions.[91]

§§ 73-78. Exemption from Regulation by Charter or Statute—§ 73. —In General.—The power of a state to regulate the rates of charges of railroad companies for the transportation of persons and freight within its jurisdiction, may, as to a particular railroad company be surrendered or in some manner qualified, by stipulations in the charter of the company, or other legislation amounting to a contract.[92] The charter of a municipality, authorizing it to prescribe rates for transportation of passengers or property within its limits, and a statute providing that the act regulating carriers shall not apply to the transportation of passengers carried solely within the limits of cities by street and other railroads, do not prohibit the state railroad commission from regulating rates on traffic originating or extending beyond the boundaries of the municipality.[93]

§§ 74-75. Necessity for Positive and Clear Words of Exemption —§ 74. Doctrine Stated.—The right of a state reasonably to limit the amount of charges by a railroad company for the transportation of persons and property within its jurisdiction, can not be granted away by its legislature unless by words of positive grant or words equivalent in law.[94] It is a salutary rule of interpre-

92. Power to regulate charges may be surrendered by charter or other legislation.—Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. Ed. 377, 9 S. Ct. 47; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 455, 33 L. Ed. 970, 10 S. Ct. 462, 702; Georgia R. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Pendleton, 86 Va. 1004, 11 S. E. 1062, affirmed in 156 U. S. 667, 39 L. Ed. 574, 15 S. Ct. 413.

A railroad company may charge rates within the limits set by its charter, though they exceed those fixed by the railroad commission; but the commission may see that it keeps within the charter rates, and for this purpose is entitled to reports from it. Mississippi R. Comm. v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 78 Miss. 750, 29 So. 789.

Under the constitution, of Pennsylvania, prohibiting the legislature from altering or revoking corporate charters in such a manner as to work injustice to the incorporators, an act prescribing maximum passenger rates for railroads lower than the rates the corporation was authorized to charge by its charter may be unconstitutional, though the rates prescribed are not so low as to be confiscatory. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Philadelphia County, 220 Pa. 100, 68 Atl. 676.

But in West Virginia it has been held that a legislature can not, by a charter granted to a railroad company, make stipulations as to charges which will be binding on future legislatures. Laurel, etc., R. Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co., 25 W. Va. 324; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Sweetzer, 25 W. Va. 434.

Accordingly it has been held that the legislature has a right to establish by general act a maximum schedule of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight, and to make it applicable to railroad companies operating under previously granted charters, though such charters empower the railroads to contract "in reference to its business the same as private individuals," or "to demand and receive such sums for transportation as it deems reasonable," or to "carry freight and passengers, charging reasonable terms," or though it is authorized to charge a fixed rate declared by its charter to be exempt from legislative control, and though no right to repeal or alter the charter is reserved to the legislature. Laurel, etc., R. Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co., 25 W. Va. 324; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Sweetzer, 25 W. Va. 434.

93. Municipal charter and statute construed.—Portland R., etc., Co. v. Railroad Comm., 56 Ore. 468, 109 Pac. 273, denying rehearing 105 Pac. 709, construing Portland City Charter (Laws 1903, § 73) and Laws 1907, p. 70, § 11.

94. Necessity for positive and clear words of exemption.—Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. Ed. 636, 6 S. Ct. 49, 88, 91, 334, 348, 1191; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U.

tation, founded upon an obvious public policy, that such exemptions are in derogation of the sovereign authority and of common right, and therefore are not to be extended beyond the exact and express requirements of the grant construed strictissimi juris.[95] If there is reasonable doubt, it must be resolved in favor of the existence of the power.[96]

§ 75. Doctrine Illustrated.—A statute which gives a railroad company the right to fix such rates as it may deem reasonable or proper,[97] or which gives the company the right to regulate rates by its by-laws, provided such by-laws are not contrary to the laws of the state,[98] or which gives it the right "from time to time

The state has the power to regulate its freight and passenger fare upon railroads, unless that right has been clearly parted with in granting charters to the roads, and where this right is parted with, the words of the charter must amount to a positive contract. Georgia R. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694.

95. Grant of exemption construed strictly against company.—Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Pendleton, 156 U. S. 667, 673, 39 L. Ed. 574, 15 S. Ct. 413; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860; Wilson v. Gaines, 103 U. S. 417, 26 L. Ed. 401; Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 114 U. S. 176, 29 L. Ed. 121, 5 S. Ct. 815.

The exemption must appear by such clear and unmistakable language that it can not be reasonably construed consistently with the reservation of the power by the state. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. Ed. 377, 9 S. Ct. 47; Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. Ed. 592, 22 S. Ct. 410.

96. Doubt resolved in favor of existence of power to regulate.—Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. Ed. 636, 6 S. Ct. 334.

97. Statute giving company right to fix reasonable rates.—Peik v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. Ed. 97; Stone v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 116 U. S. 347, 29 L. Ed. 650, 6 S. Ct. 348.

Where the charter of a railroad company authorizes the president and the directors to adopt and establish such a tariff of charges for the transportation of persons and property as they might think proper, and to alter and change the same at pleasure, the state is not deprived of its power to regulate the rates and charges. Stone v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 116 U. S. 347, 29 L. Ed. 650, 6 S. Ct. 348.

Where a charter of a railroad company provided that the company might receive for transportation such tolls and charges as should from time to time be established, fixed and regulated by its directors, and that the act should be liberally and favorably construed so as to favor all the purposes and objects of the same, provided that nothing contained therein should be so construed as to prevent the state regulation of rates for transportation within the state, and provided further that there should be no discrimination in favor of any road, it was held that the state was not deprived of the power to regulate the rates for transportation within the state. Stone v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 116 U. S. 352, 29 L. Ed. 651, 6 S. Ct. 349, 391.

The Chicago and Northwestern R. Co. was, by its charter, and the charters of other companies consolidated with it, authorized "to demand and receive such sum or sums of money for the transportation of persons and property, and for storage of property, as it shall deem reasonable." The constitution of Wisconsin, in force when the charters were granted, provides that all acts for the creation of corporations within the state "may be altered or repealed by the legislature at any time after their passage." Held, that the legislature had power to prescribe a maximum of charges to be made by said company for transporting persons or property within the state, or taken up outside the state and brought within it, or taken up inside and carried without. Peik v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. Ed. 97.

98. Act giving company power to fix rates by valid by-laws.—Ruggles v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 526, 27 L. Ed. 812, 2 S. Ct. 832; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 541, 27 L. Ed. 818, 2 S. Ct. 839.

The amended charter of a railroad company provided that the board of directors should have power to fix rates by by-laws and to levy and collect the same, while other parts of the charter provided that the by-laws should not be repugnant to the constitution and laws of the United States or of the state. It was held that the state might regulate the rates for the charge of carriage over the roads notwithstanding the first provision of the amended charter. Ruggles v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 526, 27 L. Ed. 812, 2 S. Ct. 832; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 108 U. S. 541, 27 L. Ed. 818, 2 S. Ct. 839.

to fix, regulate and receive the tolls and charges by them to be received for transportation."[99] does not deprive the state of its power, within the limits of its general authority, as controlled by the constitution of the United States, to act upon the reasonableness of the tolls and charges so fixed and regulated. On the other hand, if the charter provides that the charges, which the company may make for its services in the transportation of persons and property, shall be subject only to its own control up to the limit designated, exemption from legislative interference within that limit will be maintained.[1]

§§ 76-78. Succession to Rights of Company Entitled to Exemption —§ 76. Purchase.—A special statutory exemption or privilege, such as a right to fix and determine rates of fare, does not accompany the property in its transfer to a purchaser, in the absence of express direction to that effect in the statute.[2]

§ 77 Lease.—Where a railroad corporation which has the same power as private individuals to make contracts, including the power to make by-laws and make all rules and regulations deemed expedient for the management of its affairs, is leased to another corporation, perpetually, the latter is not exempt from reasonable regulations of rates by the state.[3]

99. Statute giving company power to fix, regulate and receive rates.—Stone v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. Ed. 636, 6 S. Ct. 334; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 455, 33 L. Ed. 970, 10 S. Ct. 462, 702.

A mere grant of power in the charter, to the directors of the company, to make needful rules and regulations touching the rates of toll and the manner or collecting the same, cannot properly be interpreted as depriving the state of its general authority to regulate, at any time in the future when it might see fit to do so, the rates of toll to be collected by the company. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 455, 33 L. Ed. 970, 10 S. Ct. 462, 702; Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 467, 33 L. Ed. 985, 10 S. Ct. 473.

1. Charter fixing limit beyond which state cannot regulate.—Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. Ed. 377, 9 S. Ct. 47. See, also, Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. Ed. 592, 22 S. Ct. 410.

Although the general purpose of a proviso in a statute is to qualify the operation of the statute, or of some part of it, it is often used in other senses, and is so used in the act of the legislature of Georgia of December 21, 1833, incorporating the Georgia Railroad Company; and that act does not exempt the corporation created by it, or its successors, from the duty of submitting to reasonable requirements concerning transportation rates made by a railroad commission created by the state. Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 32 L. Ed. 377, 9 S. Ct. 47.

2. Right of purchaser of exempt company to exemption.—St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Gill, 156 U. S. 649, 39 L. Ed. 567, 15 S. Ct. 484; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. S. 667, 673, 39 L. Ed. 574, 15 S. Ct. 413.

Sale under foreclosure.—Where one company purchases the property and ordinary franchises of another at a sale under foreclosure, it does not succeed to the rights of the latter as to exemption from rate regulation. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Pendleton, 156 U. S. 667, 673, 39 L. Ed. 574, 15 S. Ct. 413.

3. Lease.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028.

A corporation having a perpetual lease of the railroad of another organized under the general corporation law of Iowa of 1851, ch. 43, with the same powers as private individuals to make contracts, as well as the power to establish by-laws and make all rules and regulations deemed expedient for the management of its affairs, in accordance with law, was held to be bound by the subsequent statute of Iowa of 1874, ch. 68, entitled "An act to establish reasonable maximum rates of charges for transportation of freight and passengers on the different railroads of this state," by which those railroads were classified according to the gross amount of their earnings per mile for the preceding year; and the compensation per mile, which those of each class might receive tor the transportation of a passenger with ordinary baggage, was limited to three cents, three cents and a half, and four cents, respectively. Chicago, etc., R Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. Ed. 841, 8 S. Ct. 1028.

A foreign corporation leasing a railroad is subject to the same regulations that the lessor would have been subject

§ 78. Consolidation.—Where the charter of several railroad corporations provide for exemption from rate regulation, and these roads are subsequently acquired by a corporation formed for that purpose and which succeeds to their rights "subject to all laws of the commonwealth which apply to railroad corporations generally," the state may regulate the rates of the consolidated company.[4]

§ 79. Loss of Power by Abandonment or Nonuser.—A power of government which actually exists is not lost by nonuser. The fact, therefore, that the power of regulating the maximum rates of fare and freight was not exercised for more than twenty years after the incorporation of a railroad company is unimportant.[5]

§§ 80-84. Scope and Effect of Regulations—§ 80. To Whom or to What Business or Route Regulations Are Applicable.—Applicable Only to Intrastate Commerce.—An order of a state railroad commission regulating freight rates should be interpreted to apply only to intrastate commerce, under the rule that a statute should be so construed if possible, as to render it not subject to an objection that would be fatal to its validity.[6]

Statutes Regulating Rates of Railroad Companies Not Applicable to Street Railways or Express Companies.—A statute declaring that railroad companies shall not charge more than three cents a mile for the transportation of a passenger and his ordinary baggage, under a penalty, does not apply to street railroads.[7] Nor does a statute regulating the rates to be charged by railroad companies apply to an express company.[8]

Passenger Rate Regulations Not Applicable to Carriage on Freight Trains.—Regulations as to rates of fare for passengers do not apply to passento had the lease not been made. Stone v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 116 U. S. 347, 29 L. Ed. 650, 6 S. Ct. 348.

4. Consolidation.—Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Pendleton, 156 U. S. 667, 39 L. Ed. 574, 15 S. Ct. 413.

The consolidation, pursuant to the statute of Ohio of April 10, 1856 (4 Curwen 2791), of two or more railway companies works their dissolution. All the powers and franchises of the new company which is thereby formed are derived from that statute, and are subject to "be altered, revoked, or repealed by the general assembly," under § 2, art. 1, of the constitution of that state, which took effect September 1, 1851. The general assembly does not, therefore, impair the obligation of a contract by prescribing the rates for the transportation of passengers by the new company, although one of the original companies was, prior to the adoption of that constitution, organized under a charter which imposed no limitation as to such rates. Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. Ed. 357.

5. No loss of power by abandonment or nonuser.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94.

6. Regulations applicable only to intrastate commerce.—Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Campbell, 177 Fed. 318.

Where the petition of shippers filed with a state railroad commission prayed for an order requiring railroads maintaining a physical connection in a city to file reasonable rates for the switching of car load traffic between their lines, an order of the commission fixing a tariff per car load for the movement of all commodities in car loads in the switching service, must be construed as applicable only to intrastate commerce. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 175 Ind. 630, 95 N. E. 364.

7. Regulation not applicable to street railroads.—Hoyt v. Sixth Ave. R. Co. (N. Y.), 1 Daly 528.

8. Regulations not applicable to express companies.—The Texas statute, Rev. St., arts. 4256, 4257, provide that no railroad company shall demand or receive for transporting a passenger exceeding five cents per mile or a fraction thereof; that railroads companies may charge and receive not exceeding fifty cents per one hundred pounds per one hundred miles for transporting freight, but the charges on each class or kind shall be uniform, and no unjust discriminations in the rates or charges shall be made against any person or place; provided that, when the distance from the place of shipment to the point of destination is fifty miles or less, a charge not exceeding thirty cents per one hundred pounds may be made. Held not intended to apply to express companies. Texas Exp. Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 4 Woods 370, 6 Fed. 426.

ger carriage on freight trains.[9]

Phrase "Continuous Ride in the Same General Direction," Construed.—The phrase, "continuous ride in the same general direction," in an ordinance relating to rates of fare to be charged by a traction company, means a journey over the company's own tracks.[10]

Two Railroads Operating in Connection with One Another Constitute a Single Road.—For the purpose of the West Virginia statutes regulating railroad rates, two railroads operating in connection with one another under a lease or otherwise constitute a single road.[11]

Other Peculiar Provisions of Rate Regulating Statutes.—The interpretation of other peculiar provisions of rate regulating statutes to determine to what railroads or routes they are applicable will be found in the appended note.[12]

§ 81. Obligations Imposed on Carriers.—The franchise of a railroad company granting a portion of the sovereign power of the state, in consideration of the construction of the road and the performance of the duty of common carrier, imposes upon the company the obligation to transport merchandise and passengers on the terms fixed in the grant.[13] Under a statute prohibiting carriers from charging shippers more than the public tariff rates, such rates are compensation for the performance of all the carrier's common-law or statutory duties.[14] Some of the peculiar provisions of commission rules or orders regulating charges by railroad companies have been interpreted by the courts to determine what service, if any, is thereby imposed on such companies.[15]

12. Regulation applicable to whole route.—The sixteenth section of the charter of the Camden & Amboy Railroad Company, which restricts the rates of tolls and fares, applies to the whole route between the cities of New York and Philadelphia and every mile of it. Camden, etc., Transp. Co. v. Briggs, 22 N. J. L. 623. See, also, Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Briggs, 21 N. J. 406.

Act not applicable to any railroad under fifty miles in length.—The proviso in the West Virginia statute, Acts 1907, c. 41 (Code Supp. 1909, §§ 2496a1-2496a3), that nothing in the act shall apply to any railroad under fifty miles in length and not a part of any other railroad over fifty miles in length, means the same as if it had said nothing in this act shall apply to any railroad under fifty miles in length and not a part of or under the control of any other railroad whose entire length is over fifty miles. Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

The words "under the control, management or operation," as used in the proviso of such statute, providing that the act shall not apply to any railroad under fifty miles in length under the control, management, or operation of any other road, mean the same as the words "a part of." Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

Regulation applicable to railroad company notwithstanding it had changed its name.—The Wisconsin statute, Laws 1874, c. 273, providing the maximum rates to be charged by railroads within Wisconsin included the "Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company." Just prior to the passing of the act such company changed its name to the "Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company," by which name it was sued for a violation of the act. No other company was ever known by the first name. Held, that the provisions of the act applied to the defendant. Attorney General v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 35 Wis. 425.

The rate for freight to which the Southern Pacific Railroad Company is limited by its charter has no reference to any road except that which the company is authorized to build and operate in Texas. Knight & Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 41 Tex. 406.

§ 82. Measure of Compensation Allowed.—Where the measure of compensation of a carrier is fixed by statute, no greater sum can be lawfully demanded or received, and all evidence that charges higher than those so fixed are reasonable is immaterial and inadmissible.[16] The provisions of rate regulating statutes have been interpreted by the courts to determine the basis rate for local freight,[17] the distinction between "single-line rates" and "double-line rates,"[18] the rate chargeable for heavy articles,[19] the charge allowable for transportation in addition to toll,[20] the right of shippers to demand commutation on freight,[21] to and arriving at the city of Jacksonville from points in the state to any planing mill in the Jacksonville yards and thence after lumber is dressed to any point in the same yard, merely fixes a rate for switching cars so consigned and arriving and does not seek to compel a service. Florida R. Comm'rs v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 60 Fla. 218, 53 So. 601. See, also, Railroad Comm'rs v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 59 Fla. 612, 52 So. 4.

The word "switching," as used in a rule of the railroad and warehouse commission of Illinois regulating charges, is synonymous with the word "transferring." The service contemplated by such rule is the movement of loaded cars to or from the junction of another railroad for distances less than three miles, as distinguished from the hauling or transporting of them from one station or place to another on the same road. Sparta Gas, etc., Co. v. Illinois So. R. Co., 155 Ill. App. 283, affirmed 93 N. E. 312.

Where in the service rendered all of the elements of a regular transportation were found, such as collection of the cars and placing them for loading, the haul after they were loaded, and the loss of use of cars at the end of the haul, the services rendered by the carrier were not a "switch movement" of cars as defined by the rules of the railroad and warehouse commission regulating switching charges. Sparta Gas, etc., Co. v. Illinois So. R. Co., 155 Ill. App. 283, affirmed in 93 N. E. 312.

16. Carrier limited to measure of compensation fixed by statute.—Heiserman v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 63 Iowa 732, 18 N. W. 903.

17. Basis rate for local freight.—The rate on freight "carried over the whole line of its road," which furnishes the basis for the additional 50 per cent allowed by the Alabama statute, Acts 1873, p. 62, for the transportation of "local freight," is the rate charged on freight taken on at one terminus and discharged at the other, and not the rate for freight brought from or carried to a point beyond the termini of the road. The basis rate is the rate prevailing at the time of shipment. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Steiner, etc., Co., 61 Ala. 559.

18. Distinction between "single-line rates" and "double-line rates."—The distinction in the Kansas statute, Laws 1905, c. 353, establishing rates for transportation of oil, between "single-line rates" and "double-line rates" is between rates for shipment over a single line and for shipment over more than one line. Tucker v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 82 Kan. 222, 108 Pac. 89.

19. Rate chargeable for heavy articles.—Where the charter of a railroad company authorized it "to charge for the transportation of passengers at a rate not exceeding seven and one half cents per mile, and for the transportation of goods by weight not exceeding fifty cents per one hundred pounds per one hundred miles," held, that for heavy articles the company could only charge, for the actual distance of transportation, the rate allowed by the charter. Knox v. South Carolina R. Co., 5 S. C. 22.

20. Charge allowable for transportation in addition to toll.—The charter of a railroad company provided "that the toll on any species of property shall not exceed an average of four cents per ton per mile, nor upon each passenger an average of two cents per mile." Held, that the company might charge for transportation in addition to the toll. Boyle v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 54 Pa. 310.

Under the provision of the charter of a railroad company authorizing it to take toll for freight, etc., "not exceeding four cents per ton per mile for toll, and three cents per ton per mile for transportation," held, that the company had authority for demanding the aggregate of the sums, viz. seven cents per mile per ton, for private freight in their own cars on their road. Appeal of Cumberland Val. R. Co., 62 Pa. 218.

Amount permitted to be charged for toll and freight.—The thirteenth section of the Pennsylvania act of April 3, 1837, incorporating the Pittsburgh & Connellsville Railroad Company, authorized the company to charge a toll on traffic passing over its road, not exceeding five cents per ton per mile. The fourteenth section authorized the company to charge for freight and toll for goods conveyed in its own cars "not exceeding twice the rates granted in the preceding section for tolls alone." The ninth section of the act of April 10, 1846, repealed the thirteenth section, and provided that the rates of the tolls should not exceed four cents per mile per ton, and two cents per mile for each burden or freight car, every four wheels being computed as a car. Held, that the act of 1846 did not amend the act of 1837 so that the company could, under the fourteenth section of the former act, only charge double the rate authorized by the act of 1846, and that it was entitled to charge for toll and freight double the rate authorized by the thirteenth section of the act of 1837, viz, ten cents per ton per mile, notwithstanding the repeal thereof. National Tube Works Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. (Pa.), 8 Atl. 6.

22. Mode of ascertaining average charges.—Under the Pennsylvania statute, Act April 11, 1848, incorporating the D. & P. Ry. Co., as amended by Act April 2, 1850, § 2, providing that "average charges for toll and transportation shall not exceed four cents per ton per mile for freight," the "average charges" are to be ascertained by dividing the entire receipts by the whole quantity of tonage, reduced to a common standard of tons moved one mile. Hersh v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 74 Pa. 181.

23. What constitutes the operation or control of one railroad by another.—Under the New York Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1113, c. 565, § 101) as amended by Laws 1897, p. 776, c. 688, relating to street surface railroads, and providing that no corporation constructing and operating a railroad under the provisions of this article, etc., shall charge any passenger more than five cents for one continuous ride from any point on its road, "or on any road, line or branch operated by it, or under its control," to any other point thereof, etc., and Railroad Law (Laws 1890, p. 1096, c. 565, § 39) imposing a penalty on any railroad corporation receiving more than the lawful rate of fare, etc., the operation or control of a road within the meaning of such sections means a control of the operation of the road, and not merely a control of the corporation or individuals operating it by reason of the ownership of a majority of the road's capital stock. Judgment, 111 App. Div. 39, 97 N. Y. S. 645, affirmed. Senior v. New York City R. Co., 187 N. Y. 559, 80 N. E. 1120.

24. "Public schools" held to include parochial school maintained by private benevolence.—Where a street railroad's franchise ordinance required the issuance of 20-ride tickets at the rate of two and a half cents each to children under fifteen actually attending the "public schools of the city," such quoted clause included a parochial school maintained by private benevolence. Oklahoma R. Co. v. St. Joseph's Parochial School, 33 Okl. 755, 127 Pac. 1087.

Under the Washington statute, Rem. & Bal. Code, §§ 4317, 4333, and 4366, the words "school children" in a franchise granting half fares to school children held to apply only to those attending the common schools. Seattle v. Seattle Elect. Co., 71 Wash. 213, 128 Pac. 220.

The word "pupils," as used in the Massachusetts statute Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 72, requiring street railroads to transport the pupils of public schools at half rates, means children and youths attending the public schools, and does not include students in colleges and professional schools, nor young men or boys attending nautical or industrial schools, nor adults attending evening schools or evening high schools, nor children attending vacation schools. Commonwealth v. Connecticut Valley St. R. Co., 196 Mass. 309, 82 N. E. 19.

What schools are "public schools" under Massachusetts statute.—The schools referred to in the Massachusetts statute, Rev. Laws, c., 42, §§ 1, 2, requiring cities and towns to maintain certain schools, are open under proper regulations to all children of the city or town, as provided by chapter 44, § 3; and all children between the ages of 7 and 14 are obliged to attend such schools, unless they receive equivalent instruction outside of them, as provided by chapter 44, §§ 1, 2. Held, that Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 72, providing that street railway companies shall transport pupils of the "public schools" at half fare, while traveling to and from the schoolhouses in which they attend school, referred to those schools mentioned in chapter 42, §§ 1, 2, which are a part of the system of compulsory education for children, and did not include other schools maintained at public expense, such as industrial schools, nautical schools, evening schools, etc., authorized by §§ 10, 11, 12, 15, 16. Commonwealth v. Connecticut Valley St. R. Co., 196 Mass. 309, 82 N. E. 19.

What schools are "private schools" under Massachusetts statute.—The Massachusetts statute, Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 72, requiring street railroads to transport "pupils of the public schools" at half rates, was amended by St. 1906, p. 653, c. 479, by the insertion of the words "or provisions of rate regulating statutes or commission orders have been construed by the courts to determine the amount that may be charged by carriers for the carriage of passengers or freight.[25] private" after the word "public." Held, that the word "private," as so used, included only such schools as were ejusdem generis with the public schools previously mentioned, namely, in which instruction was permitted to take the place of the compulsory instruction required in the public schools designated by Rev. Laws, c. 42, §§ 1, 2, and hence did not include education in a private business college. Commonwealth v. Connecticut Valley St. R. Co., 196 Mass. 309, 82 N. E. 19.

25. West Virginia passenger rate regulation construed.—The West Virginia statute, Acts 1907, c. 41 (Code Supp. 1909, §§ 2496a1-2496a3), divides steam railroads into classes for the purpose of passenger rate regulation, subjecting all railroads fifty miles long and over to two cents a mile in the case of adults, and leaving all others subject to the former legislation applicable to them at the date of the passage of the act. Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

Minimum charge of ten cents for a passenger.—The South Carolina statute, Rev. St. 1893, § 1657, authorizes the railroad commissioners to establish reasonable rates for the transportation of passengers. A circular issued by such commissioners, dated April 2, 1896, authorized a charge of ten cents, when the regular fare would be less than that amount. Held, to authorize the charge of ten cents where the regular fare for the distance traveled would be only three cents. Kibler v. Southern Railway, 62 S. C. 252, 40 S. E. 556.

Carrier authorized to charge nearest multiple of five whether above or below actual fare.—Under the Ohio statute, Rev. St., 3374, which provides that railroads shall charge not more than three cents per mile for the transportation of passengers, but that the fare may be made that multiple of five nearest reached by multiplying the rate by the distance, the railroad shall charge the nearest mutiple of five, whether it is above or below the actual fare; and, in case the fare is equally distant from the multiple next below and the one next above, it may charge either. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Wells, 61 O. St. 268, 55 N. E. 827.

Charge for fraction of a mile.—The Michigan statute, 3 How. Ann. St. § 3323, subd. 9, which authorizes railroad companies to regulate the time and manner in which passengers and property shall be transported, and the tolls and compensation to be paid therefor, but provides that such compensation for transporting any passenger and his or her ordinary baggage, not exceeding a given weight, shall not exceed two, two and one-half, or three cents per mile, according to the gross earnings per mile of each road, will not permit a charge for a fraction of a mile, unless it is so large a fraction as to make the charge of one cent or more not in excess of the rate per mile fixed by the statute. Zagelmeyer v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 102 Mich. 214, 60 N. W. 436, 47 Am. St. Rep. 514.

Where the distance between two points was 6.48 miles a railroad had no authority to charge to exceed nineteen cents (the fraction over nineteen cents being less than one-half cent), under Laws 1899, Act No. 202, establishing a rate of fare 3 cents per mile. Chamberlain v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 122 Mich. 477, 81 N. W. 339.

Charges for urban and suburban passenger traffic.—The Maryland statute, Act 1860, c. 259, authorized a company to lay down a railway for passenger cars between the city of Baltimore and Towsontown, and fixed the rate of fare between those points. Section 8 authorized the company to extend its railway into Baltimore, subject to such restrictions and conditions as the city might prescribe. By an ordinance of the city the rate of fare was fixed at five cents for each passenger for all distances within the city limits. Act 1865, c. 115, § 1, authorized the company to collect from each passenger over its road not more than thirty cents for the distance between the city limits and Towsontown, and not more than 6 cents for each mile or fraction thereof for way passengers an any portion of its railroad. Held, that the company had no right to claim from a passenger to the city of Baltimore, from a place on the road distant less than a mile from the city, more than eleven cents; that is, six cents for the fraction of a mile beyond the city limits, and five cents for the route over its road in the city. Baltimore, etc., Turnpike Road v. Boone, 45 Md. 344.

Street surface railroad leasing and operating connecting elevated and steam surface roads.—The New York statute, Laws 1890, p. 1113, c. 565, art. 4, entitled "Street Surface Railroads," § 101 provides that "no corporation constructing and operating a railroad under the provisions of this article or of chap. 252, p. 309, of the Laws of 1884" (relating to street surface roads) shall charge any passenger more than five cents for one continuous ride from any point on its road, or on any road, line, or branch operated by it, or under its control, to any other point thereof, or any connecting branch thereof within the limits of any incorporated city, § 83. Regulations Will Not Be Construed to Be Retroactive.—Statutes, which establish a railroad commission and provide for the regulation of freights and fares, will not be construed to have a retroactive effect, so as to affect preor more than one fare within the limits of any such city for passage over its main line and any branch or extension thereof, if the right to construct such branch or extension was acquired under the provisions of such chapter or this article. Section 104 requires the issuance of transfers to any point on any railroad operated by it. Held, that a road incorporated as a street surface railroad which leases and operates connecting elevated and steam surface railroads does so under art. 3, § 78, which applies to all railroads, and it may charge more than one fare for a continuous passage over its road and the elevated and steam surface roads, as it operates such roads under their respective charters, and its right in this respect is not changed by changing its motive power from steam to electricity. People v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 187 N. Y. 48, 79 N. E. 838.

Power of company limited by its charter to increase passenger rate under general act.—The New York statute, General Railroad Act 1850, § 49, conferred all the powers and privileges in the act on corporations then existing, whether created by special charter or under the general act of 1848; but no liabilities were imposed on them, except such as were contained in certain sections, and which were not inconsistent with the provisions of their charters. Held that, where an existing corporation was limited by its charter to a rate of fare for passengers less than that prescribed by the act, it was authorized by such act to increase its rate to a sum not exceeding that thus prescribed. Johnson v. Hudson R. Co., 49 N. Y. 455, reversing 32 N. Y. Super. Ct. 298.

Bridge Toll.—By the act of congress authorizing the construction of a railway bridge across the Arkansas river at Ft. Smith, Ark., it is provided that no higher charge shall be made for the transporation of passengers over the bridge than is paid for similar transportation over the railroad leading to the bridge. Act Ark. Leg. April 4, 1887, provides that only three cents per mile shall be charged for carrying passengers. Held, that a charge of seventy cents for eleven miles of travel—thirty cents for transporation ten miles, and forty cents for bridge tool—constituted an overcharge within the meaning of the act. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Stevenson, 54 Ark. 116, 15 S. W. 22.

A street railroad company holding a franchise subject to the railroad law, and succeeding another company having a similar franchise and a contract with a bridge company to use the bridge for its cars on the payment of one cent for each passenger carried, leased its franchise to a lessee, who operated lines over the bridge. The lease did not give any rights to cross the bridge, but a traffic agreement between the street railroad company and the lessee gave to the lessee the privileges the company had by virtue of the contract with the bridge company. Neither the street railroad company nor the bridge company conferred on the lessee the right to collect toll for persons carried across the bridge. Held, that Laws 1905, c. 358, providing for a fare not to exceed five cents, applied to the lessee, and prohibited it from charging six cents, though it paid one cent to the bridge company, since such payment was merely a part of the operating expenses, and the collection of the one cent could not be held to be collected as toll as the agent of the bridge company. Cohoes R. Co. v. Public Service Comm., 143 App. Div. 769, 128 N. Y. S. 384, order affirmed 95 N. E. 1137.

Switching Charges.—Under the Railroad Commission Act, defining the jurisdiction of the state board of railroad commissioners and the meaning of the term "transportation," held, that a carrier could not divide up its charge for switching cars so as to charge, in addition to the regular switching charge, a car rental on cars furnished by it for deliveries to industries on its own or other lines. East Side Packing Co. v. Vandalia R. Co., 258 Ill. 397, 101 N. E. 600.

Authorizing charge of fifty cents per hundredweight per hundred miles.—Under the Texas statute, Rev. St., art. 4257, authorizing railroads to charge fifty cents per hundredweight per hundred miles, a railroad can charge fifty cents for carrying less than a hundredweight that distance. Murray v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 63 Tex. 407, 51 Am. Rep. 659.

Meaning of term car load.—Where the term "car load," as used in Rev. St. 1879, § 833, providing for the appointment of railroad commissioners, the division of freights into certain classes, and the fixing of maximum rates at so much per "car load" for each class, has been construed by the commissioners, whose duty it is to enforce the said statute, as meaning, in the light of existing usage, ten tons instead of all that a car can safely carry, this construction, being reasonable and just, will be upheld, especially where it has been acted upon long enough to have become a rule. Ross v. Kansas City St. R. Co., 111 Mo. 18, 19 S. W. 541.

What are "logs and box materials" under Alabama statute.—Blocks of wood from six to fifteen inches in diameter and viously existing valid contracts, in the absence of some indication that such was the legislative intent.[26]

§ 84. When a Statute Will Be Construed as Impliedly Repealing a Prior Statute.—A statute regulating passenger or freight rates will not be construed as impliedly repealing a prior statute on the same subject, unless there is an unreconcilable repugnancy, or the new law is intended to supersede the prior one and comprise in itself a complete system of legislation.[27] thirty-eight to forty-two inches long, sawed from round logs in their natural state, are not classified as "logs and box materials" by the Alabama statute, 110 commodities act (Laws 1907, p. 209); and a contract for their transportation, which describes them as cordwood, at the rate fixed for cordwood, is binding on the shipper and carrier; and the mere fact that the consignee or subsequent buyer may manufacture the blocks into barrel heads does not justify the carrier in reclassifying them as logs and box material, and demanding a higher rate as a condition precedent to a delivery. Southern R. Co. v. Lowe, 170 Ala. 598, 54 So. 51.

26. Regulations will not be construed to be retroactive.—Sultan R., etc., Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., 58 Wash. 604, 109 Pac. 1020, denying hearing in banc 109 P. 320, construing Laws 1905, c. 81, Laws 1907, c. 226, and Laws 1909, c. 93.

27. Statute not repealing former laws.—The North Carolina statute, Laws, 1907, p. 252, c. 217, regulating passenger and freight rates within the state, contains no provision repealing laws in existence at the time so far as the freight rates are concerned and with reference to passenger rates but only contains § 6, which repeals Revisal 1905, § 2618, requiring all railroad companies to furnish first and second class passenger accommodations. Held, that all laws in existence at the time of the passage of the act of 1907, and not inconsistent therewith, were still in force, under the rule stated in the text. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, 155 Fed. 756.

Statute not repealed by statute subsequently enacted.—The Missouri statute, Rev. St. 1889, § 2629, forbidding any railroad from charging over any portion of its road a greater compensation than it charges for the transportation of similar quantities of the same class of goods over any other portion of equal distance, which was passed in pursuance of Const., art. 12, § 12, containing much the same language, and requiring the passage of suitable enforcing acts by the legislature, was not repealed by Rev. St. 1889, § 2637, subsequently enacted, and which forbids railroads from charging a greater aggregate compensation for the transportation of like property "under similar circumstances and conditions for a shorter than a longer distance over the same line in the same direction," especially since another section of the latter act (Rev. St. 1889, § 2659) expressly provides that it is not intended to repeal any law in force unless in direct conflict therewith; but both sections may stand together, the former regulating freight charges in any direction over any part of the road, and the latter in the same direction under like circumstances and conditions. McGrew v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 177 Mo. 533, 76 S. W. 995.

Statute not materially modifying provisions of former law.—The Nebraska statute, Act 1893, known as the "Maximum Rate Law" (Sess. Laws, c. 24), fixing maximum rates for the transportation by rail of commodities within the state, does not materially modify the provisions of the law enacted in 1887 (Sess. Laws, c. 60), defining the duties and powers of the state board of transportation, granting such board the right to reduce freight rates or modify the schedule of commodities when it seems to them just and reasonable. Judgment 58 Neb. 823, 80 N. W. 43, affirmed on rehearing. Nebraska Tel. Co. v. Cornell, 59 Neb. 737, 82 N. W. 1.

Statute repealing prior statute.—Revisal N. C. 1905, § 2567, subsec. 9, giving railroads the right to make passenger rates within a limit of five cents a mile, was repealed by Laws 1907, p. 675, c. 469, § 7, extending and enlarging the powers of the corporation commission. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, 155 Fed. 756.

Revisal N. C. 1905, § 2567, subsec. 9, conferring on railroad companies the right to make passenger rates within a maximum of five cents a mile, repealed by implication § 1099, subd. 1, which imposed on the North Carolina railroad commission the duty of making passenger rates. Southern R. Co. v. McNeill, 155 Fed. 756.

The West Virginia statute, subsections 7 and 8, § 82c, c. 54, Code 1891, establishing classifications of freight and rates of charges therefor, was repealed by chapter 17, Acts 1895, authorizing railway companies to establish such classifications and rates, under certain restrictions. § 85. Posting Schedule at Stations.—Carriers may be required to post a printed copy of their schedule of rates at all their stations,[28] and in some states are required to do so by statute or commission rule.[29]

§ 86. Local and Through Rates.—A local railway's share of an interstate rate is not a legitimate basis upon which a state railroad commission can establish and enforce a purely local rate.[30] Under a statute which requires a railroad company to transport freight and passengers for the government "at fair and reasonable rates," the company is not bound to transport local passengers at through rates, if the local rates are "fair and reasonable."[31] The mere fact that a through rate for carriage between two points on connecting roads within the state, does not exceed the aggregate of the local rates of the two roads for carriage between the same points, does not show that the through rate is reasonable.[32] right to regulate the rates of railroads, operates as an alteration and repeal, pro tanto, of the charter of any railroad company of the state which vests such company with the exclusive right to fix its rates. Matthews v. Board of Corp. Comm'rs, 97 Fed. 400.

The New York statutes, Laws 1890, c. 565, § 37, providing that "every" railroad company "may" collect certain rates of fare, repeals a provision of a charter of a railroad company (Laws 1872, c. 594, § 5) authorizing it to fix its own rates, since the intent of the legislature was to fix a uniform rule as to railroad fares. Parker v. Elmira, etc., R. Co., 27 App. Div. 383, 49 N. Y. S. 1127, judgment affirmed 165 N. Y. 274, 59 N. E. 81.

29. Duties imposed by requirement to post schedules of rates in stations.—Under rule 4, adopted by the railroad commission of Florida, on September, 23, 1889, requiring each railroad company to "keep posted" in each of its stations copies of rate schedules, and the rules and regulations of the board regulating the transportation of freight and passengers, it is not sufficient for the company to nail up in its stations a pamphlet of eleven printed pages containing the information required, nor is it sufficient to bind the schedules together, and leave them open to the public on a prominent desk in the waiting room of the station. State v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 27 Fla. 403, 9 So. 89.

Under a rule of the Florida railroad commission requiring each railroad company to "post in a conspicuous place, and keep continuously posted in each of its stations," certain rate schedules, it is not sufficient for the company to send the schedules to its agents with instructions to post, but it must see that they are continuously kept posted, as required by the rule. § 87. Long and Short Hauls.—That a railroad company should fix a greater sum for carriage for a less distance than the maximum allowed for a greater distance, is unreasonable, as a matter of law.[33] The state may prohibit railroad companies from charging more for a short than for a long haul where the carriage is wholly within the state,[34] but when such a provision, as construed 33. Greater charge for less distance than maximum allowed for greater, unreasonable as matter of law.—Campbell v. Marietta, etc., R. Co., 23 O. St. 168.

34. State may prohibit greater charge for short than for long haul.—Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. Ed. 244, 7 S. Ct. 4; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 46 L. Ed. 298, 22 S. Ct. 95.

A state railroad corporation voluntarily formed can not exempt itself from the control reserved to itself by the state by its constitution, and if not protected by a valid contract, can not sucessfully invoke the interposition of the federal courts, in respect to the long and short haul clause in the state constitution, on the ground simply that the railroad is property. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 513, 46 L. Ed. 298, 22 S. Ct. 95.

The Constitution of Kentucky, § 218, and Ky. St. § 820, prohibiting a common carrier charging more for a short haul than for a long haul, where the shorter distance is included in the longer distance, are not in conflict with the constitution of the United States or any act of congress. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 544, 63 S. W. 448.

The Missouri statute, Act April 1, 1872 (Laws 1872, p. 69), entitled "An act to prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates to be charged by the different railroads in this state for the transportation of freight thereon," by § 1 (Rev. St. 1899, § 1126 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 971]) prohibits a railroad company in the state from charging for transportation of property for any distance over its road any larger amount as compensation than is charged by it for the transportation or similar quantities of the same class of property over a greater distance over its road; from charging different rates for receiving, handling, or delivering freight at different points on its road, or any road used by it in connection therewith; and from charging for transportation of property over any portion of its road a greater amount as compensation than is charged by it for transportation of similar quantities of the same class of property over any portion of its road of equal distance. The act was taken substantially from the Illinois law (Laws 1871-72, p. 635). In 1873, the Illinois law was declared unconstitutional on the ground that the constitution restricted the power of the legislature to prohibit discriminations to those which were unjust and made the question of the injustice of any alleged discrimination of a judicial question for the court, and that the legislature had no power to declare anything to be an unjust discrimination. The Missiouri constitution of 1865 did not limit the power of the legislature to prohibit discriminations by railroads, but Const. 1875, art. 12, § 14 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 306), adopted literally from the Illinois constitution (art. 11, § 12), the portion held to have been violated by the Illinois law providing that railroads are public highways, and railroad companies common carriers, and that the general assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger traffic on the different railroads in the state, and shall pass laws establishing maximum rates and charges for transportation of passengers and freight on the railroads, and enforce all such laws by adequate penality. The Missiouri constitution, also by art. 12, § 12 (page 306), providing that it shall not be lawful for any railroad company to charge for transportation of freight or passengers a greater amount for a less distance than the amount charged for a greater distance, and that suitable laws shall be passed to enforce the provision, adopted the very gist of the statute (the so-called "short-haul" rule) extending its provisions to passengers as well as to freight. Held, that the intent in adopting § 12 was to establish the short-haul rule as a part of the fundamental law and to put it in operation, and the provision of § 14, directing the legislature to pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger traffic, does not operate as an implied limitation on the power of the legislature to prevent only such discriminations as are unjust, the use of the word "unjust" not being intended to limit the legislature's power in that regard, but to require the exercise of such power, and to declare what shall be unjust discrimination, and such provision refers to discriminations generally, whereas the short haul rule, established by § 12, applies to a particular class of discriminations, specifically established in positive and explicit terms, so that the short-haul provision of Act 1872 was not rendered unconstitutional by the adoption of the Constitution of 1875. McGrew v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.), 132 S. W. 1076.

The Nebraska statute, Comp. St. 1903, c. 72, art. 5, forbidding railroads to charge by the state courts, applies to or interferes with interstate commerce, it is invalid.[35] The fact that competition exists at the longer, and not at the shorter, distance point, does not constitute such a dissimilarity of conditions as will authorize the carrier to charge more for the short than for the long haul.[36] A statute prohibiting the charging of more for a shorter than for a longer distance, applies, although by the original contract of carriage the merchandise was to be carried to a station beyond that at which it was left.[37] A statute providing that railroad companies shall not charge more than a certain sum for the transportation of freight of a particular weight or bulk a certain distance, does not compel them to proportion their charges to the distance carried, but fixes a maximum sum within which the companies may charge, subject only to the common-law rule that the same shall be reasonable in each particular case.[38] The short haul clauses, prohibiting the charging of more for a shorter than for a longer distance, as embodied in the constitutions and rate regulating statutes of the several states, differ somewhat in phraseology. The peculiar provisions of some of these clauses have been interpreted by the courts.[39] The action of the Kentucky Railroad Com-for transportation for a specific distance a greater sum than they charge for carriage over a greater distance, was within the legislative discretion. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson, 72 Neb. 856, 101 N. W. 1019.

35. Provision as to long and short hauls must not interfere with interstate commerce.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Eubank, 184 U. S. 27, 46 L. Ed. 416, 22 S. Ct. 277.

36. Effect of competition.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 106 Ky. 633, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 232, 51 S. W. 164, 1012, 90 Am. St. Rep. 236, affirmed in 183 U. S. 503, 46 L. Ed. 298, 22 S. W. 95.

Under the constitution of Kentucky, § 218, providing that "it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state, or any common carrier, to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of property of like kind under substantially similar circumstances and conditions for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance," competition does not justify a carrier in charging more for a shorter than for a longer distance, as the words "substantially similar circumstances and conditions" relate to the actual cost of transportation. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 104 Ky. 226, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1102, 1380, 46 S. W. 707, 47 S. W. 210, 598, 43 L. R. A. 541; Hutcheson v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 108 Ky. 615, 22 Ky. L. But in a case in a federal court it was held that notwithstanding the Oregon statute, Act Feb. 20, 1885, § 4 (Sess. Laws, 39), declaring it unlawful for any person engaged in the transportation of property by a railway to charge or receive any greater compensation for a short haul than a longer one in the same direction, a railway corporation may charge less for a long haul than a short one in the same direction, when the rate for the long haul is caused by other lines of transportation competing for business at the point from whence the long haul is made; and where the road of such corporation forms a part of a line of transportation consisting largely of water carriage, between two principal points, the rate may be made so as to enable it to compete with another road that constitutes a part of another line of water and railway transportation between the same points. 37. Provision in original contract of carriage not precluding application of short haul clause.—Osgood v. Concord Railroad, 63 N. H. 255, construing Laws 1879, c. 55.

38. Prohibiting charge of more than a certain sum for a certain distance. Ragan v. Aiken, 77 Tenn. (9 Lea) 609, 42 Am. Rep. 684.

39. Peculiar Provisions of short haul clauses interpreted.—As § 218 of the constitution of Kentucky, does not apply unless the shorter is included within the longer distance, a carrier does not violate the law where the long haul is altogether on its main line, while the short haul originates on a branch road, as the shipment is an entirety, and can not be split into parts to bring it within the law. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Walker, 110 Ky. 961, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 453, 63 S. W. 20.

The Missouri statute, Rev. St. 1899, § 1126 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 971), prohibiting a carrier from charging for transporting goods a larger amount than is charged for the transportation of similar quantities of the same class of goods over a greater distance on the same road, regulates freight charges in any direction on the same road, as applied to shipments of the same class of property in similar quantities, and is not repealed by §§ 1129, 1133, 1134 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 973-975), prohibiting a carrier from charging more for transporting a car of freight, than it mission in exonerating a carrier from the operation of the law prohibiting the charging of more for a shorter than for a longer distance is not retrospective, and does not, therefore, affect the liability which the carrier had previously incurred to shippers by a violation of the law.[40]

§ 88. Joint Tariff between Two or More Roads.—The power of the state to regulate freight charges includes the power to establish joint through rates over separate lines within its borders.[41] Where a joint tariff between two or more charges per car for several cars of a like class of freight; prohibiting rebating; making it unlawful for any carrier to give any undue preference to any person in the transportation of goods, and making it unlawful for any carrier to charge any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of like kinds of property under similar circumstances, for a shorter than a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction. Act April 1, 1872 (Laws 1872, p. 69), relating wholly to local discriminations by railroads, contains a short-haul provision, and prohibits a railroad from receiving for transportation of property any greater amount as compensation than is charged for the transportation of the same class of property over a greater distance upon the same road without regard to direction, circumstances, or conditions. Laws Extra Sess. 1887, p. 17, § 4, (Rev. St. 1899, § 1134 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 975]), relating to discriminations under "like circumstances," or "substantially similar circumstances and conditions," embraces a short-haul provision applying to hauls in the same direction under similar circumstances and conditions. The act of 1887 provided that it was not intended to repeal any law then in force, unless in direct conflict therewith, but was intended to be supplemental to such laws. Held, that such provision as to repeal furnishes the sole and only test for determining whether the act of 1872 was repealed by the act of 1887, and the two laws merely establishing two systems for preventing discrimination by railroad companies, the later act containing some but not all of the things contained in the system created by the former act and many other things, they are not in direct conflict as to the short-haul clause, and the former act was not repealed by the latter one as to such provision. McGrew v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.), 132 S. W. 1076.

That the penalties created by the acts are different, it being necessary in order to enforce the penalty prescribed by the act of 1887 (Laws Extra Sess. 1887, p. 15) for violating its short-haul section, to allege and prove that the shorter and longer hauls were made in the same direction and under similar circumstances and conditions, while such allegations and proof would not be necessary to enforce the penalty prescribed by the act of 1872, and that in a proceeding to enforce the latter penalty it would be no defense to show the facts making defendant liable to the other penalties, does not operate to work a repeal of the former act by the latter one. McGrew v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.), 132 S. W. 1076.

Such part of the Minnesota statute, Laws 1895, c. 91, as authorizes the state railroad and warehouse commission to establish by order joint through rates for the transportation of freight over any two or more connecting lines of railway within the state, and to compel obedience thereto, does not violate any of the constitutional provisions, federal or state. Commission order a complete fixing of a continuous mileage rate between two roads.—Circular No. 325, of the railroad commission, declaring that continuous mileage rates shall apply to the Central Railroad and the Wadley Southern Railway Company for transportation of passengers and freight passing between those railroads or over any portion of either, such rates to be governed by the freight and passenger tariffs prescribed by the Georgia railroad commission for the Central of Georgia Railway Company, is a clear and complete fixing of a continuous mileage rate between the two roads, without necessity of resorting, to ascertain its meaning, to rule No. 1 of the commission, declaring that, when two or more roads has been agreed upon, such tariff is as much within the control of the legislature as if it related only to transportation over a single line.[42] A state legislature may authorize its railroad commission to reduce, as unreasonable, a joint through rate agreed upon by two or more railroads, and apportion the same among the several railroad companies interested.[43] Under a statute providing that the railroad commission shall have power to fix rates for all connecting lines in the state, and if connecting railroads fail to agree on a division of the charges the commission shall fix the pro rata, a joint rate fixed by the commission is not void for failure to divide the rate between the companies.[44]

47. Municipality may require transfers under power to limit rate of fare.—The city of Chicago, having power under its charter (1 Starr & C. Ann. St. [2d Ed.] pp. 689-715, art. 5, § 1) to limit the rate of fare to be charged by street railway companies, had also, as a necessary incident thereto, power to enact Rev. Code Chicago, §§ 1723, 1725, requiring street railway companies to furnish transfer tickets entitling passengers to ride on a connecting line of the same company without the payment of an additional fare. The city of Atlanta, Ga., has no authority to impose a compulsory system of passenger transfers upon the Atlanta Consolidated Street-Railway Company, either under the city charter, the charters of the two corporations whose property was purchased by the said consolidated company, the state statutes ratifying and confirming the incorporation of street and surburban railroad companies, or under the Constitution of Georgia and the ordinance of the city of Atlanta, made in pursuance thereof, consenting to the occupation of its streets by the said consolidated company. §§ 90-95. Conditions in Grant of Franchise and Agreements with Municipalities—§ 90. Authority to Impose Conditions or to Make Agreements.—Municipal corporations are frequently authorized by statute to impose conditions as to the rates of fare to be charged by street railroad companies in granting to such companies the right to use the streets of the municipality, or to enter into agreements with such companies relative to the rates of fare to be charged.[49] A village, in granting a franchise to a street railroad company, may bargain with it with reference to rates of fare between points in the village and outside points; and the acceptance of the franchise with such a condition makes a valid contract.[50] A municipal contract which secures to the public for a term of years the benefit of a single fare of not more than five cents for a continuous passage over the whole length, or any portion of consolidated and extended street railway lines does not violate the provision of a statute providing that a municipal portion of any railroad embraced in such contract for a single fare. Judgment, 95 App. Div. 253, 89 N. Y. S. 41, affirmed. O'Reilly v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 179 N. Y. 450, 72 N. E. 517.

Corporation required to give transfers to road of which it is the beneficial owner.—Under Rev. Code Chicago, § 1723, providing that at any point where the line of a street railway points, connects, crosses, or comes within a distance of two hundred feet of any other line owned or operated by the same company any passenger shall be entitled to a transfer entitling him to ride on the connecting line without additional charge, a street railway corporation is required to give transfers if it is the real beneficial owner of both the connecting lines, though the dry legal title to one of them may be in another corporation. Chicago Union Tract. Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 579, 65 N. E. 470.

Carrier not prohibited from limiting time within which transfer can be used.—The Maryland statute, Acts 1900, p. 463, c. 313, requiring the street car company of Baltimore City to give, on request, each passenger paying a cash fare a transfer for a "continuous" ride, does not prohibit the company from limiting the time within which a transfer can be used. Binding agreements relative to rates of fare between a municipality and street railways organized either under the Michigan tram railway act as amended in 1861, or under the street railway act of 1867, which can not be altered without consent of both parties, were expressly authorized by § 20 of the latter act, declaring that railway rates shall be established by agreement between the company and the corporate authorities, the provisions of which section were by § 29 made applicable to all street railway corporations already organized and in operation. Where the selectmen of a town, on granting a street railway location, inserted a provision fixing the maximum fare to be charged within a locality covering three towns, such provision was a valid exercise of power granted by the Massachusetts statute, Pub. Statute not authorizing municipality to impose a limitation on rates.—Under the Massachusetts statute, Pub. St. 1882, c. 113, § 43 (Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 69), providing that a street railway company may establish the rates of fare, subject to its charter and the statutes, and in view of the course of legislation (Pub. corporation shall not, during the term of a street railway grant, or renewal thereof, release the grantee from any obligation or liability thereby imposed, because such contract deprives the municipality of the right to regulate fares over a portion of the consolidated lines, reserved in an ordinance adopted before the consolidation, granting a renewal franchise to the corporation which then owned such portion of the lines.[51] Under a statute authorizing towns to make contracts granting franchises to corporations operating street railways, which provides that the charge for service shall not exceed the price charged by the corporation at the time of granting the franchise, a contract which limits the rate of fare to less than that then charged by the corporation is not beyond the town's authority.[52]

§ 91. Change of Rates of Fare Fixed by Franchise or Agreement.—Where street railway fares have been established by agreement between a municipality and a street railway company, the municipality can not reduce such fares while the agreement remains in force;[53] nor can the fares so established be changed by the street railway company.[54] Under statutes conferring power upon municipalities to determine the conditions of the grant of a franchise to a street railroad company, including the rates of fare to be charged, but no power to thereafter prescribe rates of fare, if a grant by a municipality itself fixes the rate of fare a reserved right of regulation does not authorize the municipality to thereafter change it during the life of the grant.[55] A statute providing that, after a grant or renewal of a grant is made by a municipal corporation, it shall not, during the term of such grant or renewal, release the

No permission to municipal authorities to reduce street railway fares without the consent of the company below the rate at which they were fixed in compliance with Michigan Street Railway Act 1867, § 20, which declares that such rates shall be established by agreement between the parties, can be implied from the further provision of that section that the rates of fare agreed upon shall not be increased without the consent of the city authorities. Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. Ed. 592, 22 S. Ct. 410.

54. Agreement precluding railway company from abolishing sale of six tickets for twenty-five cents.—Where an ordinance is passed granting a street railway company terms for an extension, and providing that the rate of fare shall not exceed five cents per single fare, or six tickets for twenty-five cents, such being the rate of fare before the passage of the ordinance, neither the railway company nor another company to which it has leased its line can abolish the sale of six tickets for twenty-five cents from points on the two lines for which the extension was allowed by the city. Co., 194 U. S. 517, 48 L. Ed. 1102, 24 S. Ct. 756, and Cleveland v. Cleveland Elect. R. Co., 194 U. S. 538, 48 L. Ed. 1109, 24 S. Ct. 764.

grantee from any obligation or liability imposed by the terms of such grant or renewal, does not prohibit a city making a grant of a franchise to a street-railroad company, in which it reserves the right to change the rates of fare to be charged, from thereafter modifying such contract on sufficient consideration.[56]

§ 92. Effect of Acceptance by Carrier of Location Granted by Municipality.—The acceptance by a street railway company of a location granted by a municipality does not make valid conditions in the grant as to fares, which the town could not legally impose, nor does it make a contract as to fares between the company and the municipality.[57]

§ 93. Conditions and Agreements Construed.—Many of the peculiar provisions of conditions or reservations in grants of franchises to street railroad companies and of agreements between municipalities and such companies have been interpreted by the courts. The courts have thus been called upon to determine whether a municipality has reserved to itself the right to fix or to reduce rates of fare,[58] what fare the carrier is authorized to charge,[59] the amount that will entitle a passenger to carriage,[60] whether it is the carrier's

57. Effect of acceptance by carrier of location granted by municipality.—Keefe v. Lexington, etc., St. R. Co., 185 Mass. 183, 70 N. E. 37.

58. Reservation not authorizing municipality to fix rates of fare.—A reservation in an ordinance granting the use of streets for a street railroad that such road shall be "subject to all the laws and ordinances now in force, and such as may be hereafter made," does not authorize the city to fix rates of fare, unless it is, either expressly or by necessary implication, thereto authorized by some law of the state. Old Colony Trust Co. v. Atlanta, 83 Fed. 39.

Reservation not authorizing municipality to reduce rates of fare.—A reservation in an ordinance granting a street railway franchise of the right from time to time to make such further rules, orders, or regulations as to the common council may seem proper, does not include the right on the part of the city at its own pleasure to reduce the rates of fare agreed upon in such ordinance. Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. Ed. 592, 22 S. Ct. 410.

59. Carrier only authorized to charge single fare for ride in both divisions of city.—Where city ordinances granted the right to operate street railway lines in the South and West divisions of the city, and provided that the rate of fare for any distance should not exceed five cents, the street railway company was not thereby authorized to charge a fare of five cents for a ride in one division, and another fare for a ride in the other division, but only to charge a single fare for a ride in both divisions. Chicago Union Tract. Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 65 N. E. 451, 59 L. R. A. 631.

Fare chargeable from point in village out toward another village.—A railroad company operating a road through the village of H. to the village of W., being entitled, under its franchise, to charge one fare of five cents between the limits of the village of H. and the village of W., where a charge of one fare was made through the village of H. to a point therein, another fare could be charged from that point out toward the village of W., without incurring the penalty for charging excessive fares, under Railroad Law, § 39 (Laws 1890, p. 1096, c. 565). Byars v. Bennington, etc., R. Co., 99 App. Div. 34, 90 N. Y. S. 736, affirmed in 184 N. Y. 554, 76 N. E. 1090.

Rates prescribed between certain points binding though points are beyond limits of municipality.—A street railway operating its line through a village under a franchise from such village, which provides for a certain rate of fare per mile between certain points, is bound by such rate, even though the points specified are beyond the limits of the village. Vining v. Detroit, etc., Railway, 133 Mich. 539, 95 N. W. 542.

60. Right to ride for five cents.—A franchise to a street railway from the village of W., situated wholly within the township of N., providing that the company shall be entitled to charge at the rate of one and a half cents per mile, except as thereinafter provided, for a continuous trip, provided no passenger shall be carried for a less fare than five cents for any distance, does not prevent one having the right to ride for five cents between any two points in N. township, though he may pass through the village of W., or go from a point within it to a point outside

Through passenger entitled to ride through township and villages therein at township rate.—In Michigan, where the councils and township boards of several cities, villages, and townships, under whose ordinances and resolutions an electric railway runs, fixed a rate for travel thereon through each city, village, and township respectively, a through passenger would be entitled to ride through a township and the villages therein at the township rate, since a village is under the jurisdiction of the township board as to all but village affairs. Coy v. Detroit, etc., Railway, 125 Mich. 616, 85 N. W. 6.

Passenger entitled to ride beyond township limits at rate prescribed.—Where a township, in pursuance of the Michigan statute, Comp. Laws 1897, § 6446, on granting consent to an electric railway company to construct and operate its line along the highways of the township, imposed a condition that the railway company should not charge more than two cents per mile for each passenger carried, provided that no single fare should be less than five cents, a passenger taking a car in the township was entitled to ride over the entire line at the rate of two cents per mile, though it extended beyond the township limits, provided that the total amount paid should not be less than five cents. Ross Tp. v. Michigan United R. Co. (Mich.), 130 N. W. 358.

61. Franchise requiring sale of five tickets for 50 cents.—A street-railway company operating under a franchise requiring the sale of five tickets for fifty cents, which sells such tickets in two parts, one of which is good to a named point on the line, and the other part good for the remainder of the trip, will not be heard to say, in an action for damages for refusal to sell five tickets to one who had paid his fare on the first part of the line with a stub, intending to pay for the remainder of the trip with a stub from the new tickets, that the franchise called only for the acceptance of a through ticket in payment of fare, and hence plaintiff could not recover for defendant's failure to furnish a ticket in two parts, not called for by the franchise. Rice v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., 122 Mich. 677, 81 N. W. 927, 48 L. R. A. 84.

62. Carrier not required to grant transfers from lines in one city to those in another.—A street railway company permitted to construct a railway in a city on condition that the fare for riding in the city be five cents, and that it gives transfers to all of its lines, took an assignment of all the rights and succeeded to all the obligations of another street railway company which had constructed a line in an adjoining city on the same condition. Held that, having been permitted to connect the lines without any such condition, it was not required to grant transfers from the lines in one city to those in the other. Montpelier v. Barre, etc., Power Co., 76 Vt. 66, 56 Atl. 278.

Country passengers entitled to same transfer rights as city passengers.—The franchise of a street railway provided that passengers on a line extending into the country should, on arriving in the city at a certain point, be transferred to the cars of another line, and, when so transferred, should have the same rights and privileges as passengers on that line. Passengers on the latter line were entitled, without additional fare, to one transfer therefrom to any of the company's cars going in the same direction. Held, that passengers on the country extension, on arriving in the city, were entitled to a transfer to the main line, and thereafter, without additional fare, to a transfer to other cars going in the same direction, as long as the city passengers were entitled thereto; since the franchise entitled country passengers to the same privileges as city passengers, and not merely to the same number of transfers. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 97 Va. 26, 32 S. E. 775.

Line held an intersecting line within obligation to give transfers to intersecting lines.—The ordinance granting a franchise to a street railroad company provided that it should sell half-fare tickets between certain hours, and give transfers at points where one line intersected with another. The company owned a line which extended from its point of intersection with another line to the city limits, beyond which it was owned by a different corporation, which, however, ran its cars with the same operatives into the city and to the point of intersection. Held, that this line was an intersecting line, to which the provisions as to half-fare tickets and transfers applied. Virginia Passenger, etc., Co. v. Commonwealth, 103 Va. 644, 49 S. E. 995.

63. Who may travel at the rate prescribed.—Where the ordinance of one of several villages, townships, and cities, under whose ordinances an electric railway runs, entitled such railway to charge at the rate of one and a half cents a mile for travel on its road between any two points thereon, any member of the public, though not a resident of such village, was entitled to ride at such rate. Coy v. Detroit, etc., Railway, 125 Mich. 616, 85 N. W. 6.

railway company is required to provide pupils in schools transportation at half price,[64] and the effect of annexation of territory by the municipality subsequent to its agreement with the carrier.[65] A construction of a contract in a franchise to carry school children for half price, acquiesced in by the parties binds their future actions.[66]

§ 94. Waiver of Right to Charge More than Amount Stipulated in Franchise.—Where a town granted a franchise to a street-railroad company,

64. The word "schools" is one of broad signification, and sometimes it may appear, by the connection in which it is used, to include higher institutions of learning; but ordinarily, and without something to indicate that a wider meaning was intended to be given to the word, it will not be taken to include higher institutions of learning, such as colleges, universities, or institutions for the teaching of trades, professions, or business; and where a street railway was, as a condition to a grant of a location, required to provide to pupils in attendance upon the public schools, the state normal school of W., or any school in W., transportation at half price while going to and from school, neither a college nor a business institute in W. could fairly come within the language of the restriction. Clinton v. Worcester, etc., St. R. Co., 199 Mass. 279, 85 N. E. 507.

65. Ordinance prescribing rates of fare has effect in territory subsequently annexed.—An ordinance accepted by a street railway company providing that at certain hours during the day the company should charge certain fares over its lines within the city must be construed strictly against the company, and therefore has equal effect in territory subsequently annexed to the city. People v. Detroit United Railway, 162 Mich. 460, 127 N. W. 748, affirming judgment 125 N. W. 700, on rehearing.

An ordinance was passed providing that a street railroad company should furnish workingmen's tickets at a reduced rate, good over any of its lines in the city, which ordinance was accepted by the railway, and the same ordinance gave the railway a right to extend its tracks to the easterly limits of the city. Subsequently the railway franchise was assigned to a united company, which thereafter purchased a suburban line wholly without the limits of the city. The city then extended its limits to cover a portion of the territory in which the purchased railroad was. Held, that since there were two methods of extending a street railway, one by construction, and the other by purchase under Comp. Laws 1897, § 6448, the purchase of the suburban railway by the united company was an "extension," and hence the company was bound by the ordinance, regardless of the franchise of the suburban railroad. People v. Detroit United Railway, 162 Mich. 460, 125 N. W. 700, judgment affirmed on rehearing 127 N. W. 748.

Held, also that the ordinance covered future extensions of the city limits, since it was reasonably in the contemplation of the original parties that the limits would be extended; and hence the company was bound to give such reduced fares on its purchased line. People v. Detroit United Railway, 162 Mich. 460, 125 N. W. 700, 127 N. W. 748.

Passengers within territory annexed must be carried at rate prescribed.—A franchise to operate a system of street railroads in a city which provides that the fare shall not exceed five cents between points within the city limits, though a transfer shall be necessary, is applicable to territory subsequently annexed to the city, and passengers within the territory annexed must be carried for five cents. Dennison v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., 64 Wash. 167, 116 Pac. 638.

A contract between a city and a street railway operating its lines in the city which binds the company to carry passengers within the city for a single fare not exceeding five cents, and to issue transfers to all passengers for a continuous trip one way to and from all lines in the city, is binding on the company operating a line in territory outside of the city under a county franchise on the territory being subsequently annexed to the city. Peterson v. Tacoma, etc., R. Co., 60 Wash. 406, 111 Pac. 338.

Carrier bound to accept transfer to passenger's destination in territory annexed.—A street railroad operating its lines in a city under a contract to issue transfer tickets free of charge to all passengers requesting the same, who might board its cars at any point on any of its lines in the city, and whose destination might be to any other point on any other line of the company's road in the limits of the city, is bound to transport a passenger tendering such transfer to his destination on the company's line, though that be in territory annexed to the city after the contract was made, and on its interurban line, on which it had a franchise entitling it to charge an additional fare outside the city as its limits were before the annexation of territory. Indiana R. Co. v. Hoffman, 161 Ind. 593, 69 N. E. 399.

66. Construction acquiesced in by parties binds their future actions.—Seattle v. Seattle Elect. Co., 71 Wash. 213, 128 Pac. 220.

the contract stipulating that the fare between any two points on its lines should not exceed five cents, the grantee waived its right to charge more as successor of another company whose charter allowed it to charge ten cents, under which charter the grantee had established a fare of five cents for a continuous ride.[67]

§ 95 Acquisition by Sale or Consolidation of a Railway Company Having a Contract with a Municipality.—Where a street railway company acquires a location from the selectmen of a town, which provides that no higher than a specified fare rate shall be charged, a subsequent corporation acquiring the assets and franchises of the original company under a general law, authorizing such acquisition by sale or consolidation takes subject to the same obligation.[68]

§§ 96-108. Preferences and Discriminations—§ 96. The Common-Law Doctrine.—Independent of statute, every common carrier must carry for all to the extent of its capacity, without undue or unreasonable discrimination either in charges or facilities.[69] It can not so operate its road or conduct its business as to give an undue advantage to certain individuals, to the exclusion of others.[70] It is no proper business of a common carrier to foster particular enterprise or to build up new industries, but, deriving its franchise from the legislature, and depending upon the will of the people for its very existence, it is bound to deal fairly with the public, to extend them reasonable facilities for the transportation of their persons and property, and to put all its patrons upon an absolute equality.[71] But it has been held that a common carrier is permitted

69. Duty not to discriminate as to charges or facilities.—Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. Ed. 291, 4 S. Ct. 185.

A railroad company as a common carrier is required to treat the public with equality and fairness. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Rust, 58 Tex. 98.

Section 6 of the constitution of Colorado providing that: "All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal rights to have persons and property transported over any railroad in this state, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges or facilities for transportation of freight or passengers within the state, and no railroad company, nor any lessee, manager, or employee thereof, shall give any preference to individuals, associations, or corporations in furnishing cars or motive power," imposed no greater obligation upon a railroad company than the common law imposed upon it. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. Ed. 291, 4 S. Ct. 185.

Where a railroad voluntarily establishes as to a certain favored class of shippers a rate so low as to be unremunerative, the rate must nevertheless be granted to all alike. Alabama, etc., R. Carriers may not discriminate between markets or individuals in granting the privilege of milling lumber in transit. Railroad Comm'rs v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 59 Fla. 612, 52 So. 4.

71. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 680, 37 L. Ed. 986, 13 S. Ct. 970 (holding that this principle is recognized in the Colorado act of 1885 prohibiting discriminations in charges).

Railway companies derive their charter rights from the state and owe an equal duty to every citizen, and they can not exercise their charter rights in such manner as to benefit an individual, town or community, to the detriment of another. H. & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 63 Tex. 322.

A "rebilling rate," to receive the sanction of law, must operate uniformly and fairly, and can not lawfully be restricted to shippers in a certain locality who previously receive freights over a certain other favored associate carrier. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 86 Miss. 667, 38 So. 356. Affirmed 203 U. S. 496, 51 L. Ed. 289, 27 S. Ct. 163.

A true rebilling rate is one in which goods received in unbroken car load lots over one line of railway can be rebilled over the same or another line, completing one continuous trip, simply changing the consignee, and altering the destination of to discriminate in freight rates, provided the circumstances are not such as to make such discrimination unjust and unreasonable, and that one complaining of such discrimination is required to show that it is unjust and unreasonable.[72]

§ 97. Standard Measure of Uniformity in Rates.—To procure uniformity in the rates of carriers, there must be a standard measurement, and the only standard measure possible in order to insure absolute uniformity is money.[73]

§ 98. Power to Prohibit Preferences and Discriminations.—A state acting through its legislature may prohibit a common carrier from giving preferences and from making discriminations either in its charges or facilities. This is a valid exercise of the police power.[74] But in exercising this power the legislature must act within constitutional limitations,[75] and the provisions of the prohibiting statute must be certain.[76] Power is frequently conferred upon the identical shipment, without unloading. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 86 Miss. 667, 38 So. 356, affirmed in 203 U. S. 496, 51 L. Ed. 289, 27 S. Ct. 163.

A so-called "rebilling rate" adopted by a railroad, which is not applied to consignments arriving over all connecting lines, but is only available to those receiving freight over associate lines, and under which freight reconsigned over the rebilling road does not complete one continuous trip without rehandling, and is not necessarily the identical shipment originally consigned, there being a custom of granting dealers handling freight over the associate line the privilege within ninety days from the date of their "expense bills," or receipts showing the amount of freight received over such line, of shipping an equal amount of freight over the rebilling line at the rate adopted, is not a true rebilling rate. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 86 Miss. 667, 38 So. 356, affirmed in 203 U. S. 496, 51 L. Ed. 289, 27 S. Ct. 163.

72. Discrimination in freight rates permissible if not unjust and unreasonable.—Railroad Comm. v. Weld, 96 Tex. 394, 73 S. W. 529, reversing 68 S. W. 1117; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Rust, 58 Tex. 98.

73. Only standard measure of uniformity possible is money.—State v. Union Pac. R. Co., 87 Neb. 29, 126 N. W. 859.

"If a railway company can adopt the principle of barter and receive in return for its service specific articles the value of which may vary from day to day, and often may be uncertain, the magnitude of the task of ascertainment of the value of each article alone would render the regulation of rates, so as to prevent discrimination, absolutely impossible." State v. Union Pac. R. Co., 87 Neb. 29, 126 N. W. 859.

74. Statute prohibiting discriminations an exercise of police power.—The Kentucky statute, St. 1903, §§ 818, 819, prohibiting discriminations by common carriers and providing penalties therefor, was but a further exercise of the state's police power to regulate carriers and designed to provide a means of compelling obedience to the mandatory provisions of Const., § 213, relating to the same subject. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Central Stock Yards Co., 30 Ky. L. Rep. 18, 97 S. W. 778.

Power of legislature to prohibit free transportation.—The Nebraska statute, Laws 1907, p. 342, c. 93, prohibiting the issuance acceptance, and use of free transportation, is within the power of the legislature to regulate the business of common carriers by preventing unjust discrimination. State v. Martyn, 82 Neb. 225, 117 N. W. 719.

Power of legislature to prohibit unjust discriminations in fixing joint rates.—The Iowa statute, Acts 23d Gen. Assem., c. 17, § 1, providing that unjust discriminations made by railroad companies in fixing joint rates shall be punished under Acts 22d Gen. Assem., c. 28, is constitutional. Blair v. Sioux, etc., R. Co. (Iowa), 73 N. W. 1053.

The state may supervise a carrier's branch roads built by it for lumbermen, and thereby prevent discrimination. Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Michigan R. Comm., 171 Mich. 325, 137 N. W. 329.

75. Power of legislature restrained to a prohibition of unjust discriminations.—The Illinois statute, act July 1, 1871, making any discrimination by railroad companies in their charges for freight a penal offense, and providing for a forfeiture of all their franchises for any willful violation of the act, without any other penalty for the first offense, violates the provision of Const., art. 11, § 15, that "the general assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs on the different roads in the state, and enforce such laws by adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their property and franchises." The power of the legislature is, by implication, restrained to a prohibition of those discriminations which are unjust. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11, 16 Am. Rep. 599.

76. Statute void for uncertainty.—The Kentucky statute, § 818, providing that it shall be unlawful for any corporation to make or give "any undue or unreasonable corporation or railroad commissions to make and enforce such regulations as may be necessary to prevent unjust or unreasonable discriminations by carriers, or to correct charges made by a carrier which are unjustly discriminatory.[77] Certain municipal ordinances prohibiting discrimination by carriers have been held valid.[78] preference or advantage" to any particular person or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in the transportation of a like kind of traffic, is void for uncertainty. Commonwealth v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 20 Ky. L. Rep. 491, 46 S. W. 700.

77. Power conferred upon corporation or railroad commissions.—The railroad commission of Georgia, under the authority given by Civ. Code 1895, § 2189, to make such reasonable rules as may be necessary to prevent unjust discrimination in transportation of freight, has power to promulgate a rule requiring railroad companies to afford all persons equal facilities in the transportation of freight, without unjust discrimination. Augusta Brokerage Co. v. Central, etc., R. Co., 121 Ga. 48, 48 S. E. 714.

Under the Railroad Commission Act of 1907, the commission held to have authority to declare as an unlawful discrimination a course of conduct of a company with relation to connecting lines. Wadley Southern R. Co. v. State, 137 Ga. 497, 73 S. E. 741.

The Mississippi statute.—Code 1892, § 4297, authorizes the railroad commission to determine all complaints made of any tariff of rates made by any railroad, or fixed or approved by the commission, on the ground that the charges are unjust or discriminatory, and provides that when, by investigation, the commission is satisfied of the justice of the complaint, it shall give notice of any change deemed proper, and require compliance with the order. Held, that the commission had power to abolish a condition precedent to the enjoyment of a so-called "rebilling rate," voluntarily established by a railroad, restricting the rate to the exclusive benefit of those who had received previous and equal shipments of freight over an associated line connecting at one terminus of the road, and to convert the rate into an open or flat rate, so that all dealers handling grain in car load lots could enjoy the rate then in force between the termini. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 86 Miss. 667, 38 So. 356, affirmed in 203 U. S. 496, 51 L. Ed. 289, 27 S. Ct. 163.

The Constitution of Oklahoma, art. 9, § 18, providing that the state corporation commission shall require carriers to establish and maintain such public facilities as may be reasonable, and from time to time shall make and enforce such requirements and regulations as may be necessary to prevent unjust or unreasonable discrimination in favor of any person, locality, etc., in the matter of car service or efficiency of transportation, does not give such commission power to require a carrier at its own expense to provide such equal facilities between private persons or corporations as to overcome or equalize disadvantages caused by dissimilarity of location. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. State, 27 Okla. 426, 112 Pac. 1121.

The Railroad Commission Law of Oregon (Laws 1907), p. 70, c. 53, § 11), makes the term "railroad" as used therein include all corporations which operate by electric power any interurban railroad, etc. Section 28 authorizes the railroad commission, upon complaint of any municipality that fares are unreasonable, or discriminatory, to investigate and order just and reasonable fares, upon finding that those complained of are unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory. Section 48 makes it unlawful to charge smaller compensation to persons furnishing part of the facilities than to other persons. Section 49 makes the giving of an unreasonable preference, or the subjecting of any person to an unreasonable prejudice, an unjust discrimination. Section 59 requires the act to be liberally construed to attain the public welfare and substantial justice between passengers and railroads. Section 61 makes the duties of railroads the same as at common law, and the remedies against them the same, except where otherwise provided, and makes the provisions of the act cumulative. Held, in view of § 61, that the railroad commission could correct charges made by an electric railroad company which were unjustly discriminatory as to a locality, upon complaint of a town, independent of Laws 1909, p. 158, c. 97, making the provisions of the railroad commission law applicable to any locality. 78. The fact that an ordinance requires an omnibus driver to carry any person tendering himself as a passenger, whether the driver desires to carry him or not, does not render it invalid. Atlantic City v. Brown, 72 N. J. L. 207, 62 Atl. 428.

An ordinance requiring the driver of an omnibus under all circumstances to accept a person tendering himself as a passenger was held not wholly void, but only so far as it imposed the penalty prescribed therein against those whose refusal to accept a person who offered himself as a passenger was justified by the circumstances under which the refusal occurred. Atlantic City v. Brown, 72 N. J. L. 207, 62 Atl. 428.

§ 99. Power of Legislature to Permit Discrimination.—A state constitution prohibiting undue or unreasonable discrimination in charges or facilities for the transportation of passengers within the state takes from the legislature the power of abolishing this rule as applied to railroad companies.[79] But it has been held that a constitution providing that "transportation of freight and passengers by railroad, steamboat, or other common carrier shall be so regulated by general law as to prevent unjust discrimination," authorizes the legislature to prescribe other circumstances and conditions than those prescribed in the constitution in which carriers may discriminate in respect to charges for transportation, being a recognition of the justice of authorizing discrimination deemed just.[80]

§ 100. Construction of Constitutional and Statutory Enactments and Commission Orders Forbidding Preferences or Discriminations.—Many of the peculiar provisions of constitutional and statutory enactments and commission orders forbidding preferences or discriminations by carriers have received judicial interpretation. The courts have been called upon to construe such enactments or orders forbidding unjust discrimination,[81] forbidding unequal preferences,[82] forbidding unjust or unreasonable discriminations in charges,[83] requiring railroads to give reasonable and equal terms, facilities and driver of a public conveyance to refuse to convey any passenger in Atlantic City is a reasonable exercise of power. Atlantic City v. Fonsler, 70 N. J. L. 125, 56 Atl. 119.

81. Statute applicable only to transportation "between points within the state."—The Texas statute, Rev. St. 1895, art. 4575, providing that, if any railroad subject to the act unjustly discriminates against a person, it shall be liable to the one injured thereby for a certain penalty, is not applicable to discriminations as to the delivery of freight shipped from another state; art. 4580 providing that the act shall apply to and affect only the transportation of freight and cars "between points within the state." Judgment (Civ. App.) 42 S. W. 362, affirmed. Fielder v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 92 Tex. 176, 46 S. W. 633.

Existing contracts, fairly made, not abrogated.—The Illinois statute, Act July 1, 1873, prohibiting extortion and unjust discrimination by railroads, was not intended to interfere with, or abrogate, existing contracts for the carriage of goods fairly made prior to its passage. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., Coal Co., 79 Ill. 121.

Written application by shippers for cars.—The Nebraska statute, Comp. St. 1909, c. 72, art. 5, relating to rates and unjust discrimination by carriers, was intended to prevent unjust and unlawful discrimination by carriers, and § 1a thereof, providing that all shippers of freight in car load lots shall enter a written application for cars in a book kept for that purpose subject to public inspection by a person in charge of the carrier's business at a shipping point, stating the number of cars desired, when and where desired, etc., provides a reasonable method of preserving written evidence of the fact that cars were ordered by the shipper for the transportation of his goods, the date of his order, and the time when the cars were to be furnished. Anderson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 88 Neb. 430, 129 N. W. 1008.

82. Carrier required to build spur to accommodate grain elevator.—Under the Minnesota statute, Laws 1887, c. 10, § 2, subd. b, forbidding carriers to give unequal preferences, a railway company is obliged to give equal facilities for shipping grain to all persons who in good faith erect, or desire to erect, ware-houses at any station; and if it refuse a request for an elevator site on a right of way such as it grants to others, and the warehouseman buys land adjoining, and builds his elevator thereon, the company can not refuse to build a spur on its land to accommodate his business. Farwell Farmers' Warehouse Ass'n v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 55 Minn. 8, 56 N. W. 248.

83. Statute only prohibiting such charges as "unjustly" discriminate.—The Florida statute authorizing the Florida railroad commission to fix railroad rates does not prohibit discriminating charges, but only prohibits such as "unjustly" discriminate, as well as those that are unreasonable and unjust. Railroad Comm'rs v. Florida, etc., R. Co., 64 Fla. 112, 59 So. 385.

While an unjust discrimination will not be permitted under such statute, so as to make the service of a carrier remunerative, yet, in determining whether a charge

Statute not prohibiting competition for passenger business.—The Indiana statute, Acts 1905, p. 83, c. 53, regulating carriers, and prohibiting unjust discrimination in rates, construed, and held not to prohibit a railroad company from competing with another company for passenger business. Etter v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 171 Ind. 581, 86 N. E. 1020.

Prohibition applicable where carriers voluntarily fix joint rates.—The Iowa statute, Acts 22d Gen. Assem., c. 28, prohibiting common carriers from making unjust discriminations in their charges, applies where railroad companies voluntarily fix joint rates. Blair v. Sioux, etc., R. Co. (Iowa), 73 N. W. 1053.

Commutation tickets permitted to be sold.—Passenger tickets sold by a carrier at reduced rates, good for a limited time only, held to be commutation tickets within the Indiana statute, Acts 1905, p. 96, c. 53, § 14, prohibiting unjust discrimination in rates, but permitting the sale of commutation tickets. Etter v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 171 Ind. 581, 86 N. E. 1020.

Tract abutting navigable water on which is a dock, a "facility" for freight and passengers.—A tract of 20 acres acquired by a railroad under Act Cong. March 3, 1875, abutting a navigable water on which is a dock for receiving and discharging freight and passengers and for forwarding through freight and passengers, is a "facility" for freight and passengers within the constitution of Idaho, art. 11, § 6, forbidding undue or unreasonable discrimination. Coeur d'Alene, etc., Transp. Co. v. Ferrell, 22 Idaho 752, 128 Pac. 565.

84. Statute requiring railroads to give reasonable and equal terms, facilities and accommodations.—The Vermont statute, Acts 1882, p. 47, No. 36 (V. S. 3902-3904), requiring railroads to give all persons "reasonable and equal terms * * * facilities and accommodations" for the transportation of freight, etc., must be construed in the light of Acts 1882, p. 47, No. 37 (V. S. 3896), authorizing a railroad corporation to establish rates, etc., and, when so done, it requires a railroad corporation to make rates reasonable and equal as required by the common law, and it is but declaratory of the common law defining the rights and obligations of carriers; the words "facilities and accommodations" relating to the incidents of transportation, the word "terms" signifying rates. State v. Central Vermont R. Co., 81 Vt. 463, 71 Atl. 194.

85. Compensation required to be equal in amount for equal distances.—The North Carolina statute, Code, § 1966, makes it unlawful for any railroad corporation to charge for the transportation of freight a greater amount "than shall at the same time be charged by it for the transportation of an equal quantity of the same class of freight, transported in the same direction, over any portion of the same railroad of equal distance." Held, to mean that the compensation to be charged shippers respectively for carrying an equal quantity of the same class of freight for each, going in the same direction, must be equal in amount for equal distances, no matter on what part of the road, and although the freight of one shipper is to be transported a different and longer distance than that of the other. Hines v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 95 N. C. 434, 59 Am. Rep. 250.

When charges must be the same.—The requirement of the constitution of Kentucky, § 215, that the charges shall be the same for receiving, transporting, and handling freight of the same class from and to the same points, "and upon the same conditions," relates to the receiving, loading, unloading, transporting, hauling, delivering, and handling freight, and requires the charges therefor to be the same for all persons alike, except when the freight is transported from and to different points, or is of different classes, or the cost of transporting, including savings by reason of facilities furnished by the shipper, is different. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.), 46 S. W. 702.

Unlawful to obtain transportation at a less rate than that established.—Under the direct provisions of the Virginia Code of 1904, § 1294c, cl. 7, it is unlawful, after the freight rate of a railroad company has been authorized and published by the state corporation commission, for any person, by contract or other device, to obtain transportation at a less rate, and any contract for such reduced transportation is void. Carolina, etc., Railway v. Clinch Valley Lumber Co., 112 Va. 540, 72 S. E. 116.

A provision in a railroad charter, that "average charges for toll and transportation shall not exceed four cents per ton per mile for freight," construed to permit the company to impose more than four cents per mile on some charges, to discriminate in favor of longer distances, and to fix different charges per mile for different kinds of freight. The adjustment was to be made between the whole road and the entire public who used it. It need not bear equally on each individual. Hersh v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 74 Pa. 181.

Word "contemporaneous" construed.—The North Carolina statute, Revisal 1905, § 3749, provides that if any carrier shall collect from any person a greater compensation for transportation of property than it receives from any other for doing a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances, it shall be liable to a fine of a specified sum. Held, that the word "contemporaneous" means a period of time through which shipments of freight are made by one shipper at one rate, and by other shippers at another rate. Hilton Lumber Co. v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 141 N. C. 171, 53 S. E. 823, 6 L. R. A., N. S., 225.

Discriminatory rate void though agreed to by mistake.—Under the Nebraska statute, Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, § 10,009, a contract between a railroad company and a shipper to transport merchandise for a less rate than regularly charged to others for similar service is void, though the rate was agreed to by mistake; and an action will not lie against the carrier for breach of the contract if it exacts the regular rate. Judgment 113 N. W. 983, reversed on rehearing. Haurigan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 80 Neb. 139, 117 N. W. 100; Wentz-Bates Mercantile Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 85 Neb. 584, 123 N. W. 1085.

86. Under the Kentucky constitution, § 215, requiring all railway companies to transport freight of the same class for all persons for the same method of payment, and Ky. St. 1894, § 817, declaring one failing to do this guilty of unjust discrimination, a contract by a lumber company to carry a party's freight in consideration of a former grant of a right of way for a railroad can not be specifically enforced against a railroad company leasing the right of way and doing the business of a common carrier, since the carrying of the freight free would be a violation of the constitution and statutes. Hurley v. Big Sandy, etc., R. Co. (Ky.), 125 S. W. 302.

87. The Missouri statute, Rev. St. 1909, § 3173 prohibiting discrimination in transportation charges as between long and short hauls of the same class of freight on the same road, applies where the transportation is over the same road, but not where the two hauls are over different lines operated by different corporations, though they have common officers. Darlington Lumber Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.), 147 S. W. 1052.

88. Statute prohibiting unjust discrimination in passenger charges liberally construed.—A statute may be remedial in part and penal in part for purposes of construction, so that the penalty clause of the Montana statute, Rev. Codes, § 4337, making it unlawful for any carrier to transfer a person for a less sum than is charged for a similar ticket of the same class, and making any carrier who shall violate the statute guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable, etc., should be construed according to the fair import of its terms, with a view to affectuating its object as required by § 8096; but the part prohibiting unjust discrimination in charging for transportation should be liberally construed with a view to carrying out the legislative intention. John v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 42 Mont. 18, 111 Pac. 632.

Statute not abrogating system of three cent fares for school children.—The New Jersey Public Utility Law (P. L. 1911, c. 195), § 18, does not abrogate the system of three-cent fares for school children previously maintained by a street railway company; such section applying only to such preferences as are "undue or unreasonable." Public Service R. Co. v. Board, 81 N. J. L. (52 Vr.), 363, 80 Atl. 27.

89. To whom carrier may furnish transportation free.—The constitution of Oklahoma, art. 9, § 13, prohibiting railroad or transportation companies from issuing passes, with certain exceptions, does not prohibit a municipal corporation operating a street railway from furnishing transportation free to its policemen, firemen, and United States mail carriers, and half-rate tickets to school children, and free transportation to children under a certain age while traveling with a parent or guardian. Oklahoma v. Oklahoma R. Co. (Okla.), 93 Pac. 48.

By such constitutional provision, municipalities are not prohibited, from granting franchises for street railways with conditions contained there in for the carrying of policemen, firemen, United States mail carriers, and children under a certain age free, and for the furnishing to school children of transportation at a reduced rate, and when accepted by the grantee of the franchise, such conditions are valid. Oklahoma v. Oklahoma R. Co. (Okla.), 93 Pac. 48.

In Montana, railroad companies may issue free transportation or sell tickets at reduced rates, as the case may require, to its employees and members of their families; to doctors, nurses, and helpers being taken to wrecks; to soldiers and sailors going to or coming from institutions wherein they are kept; to ministers or persons engaged in charitable and religious works; and, by the direct provision of Rev. Codes, § 4369, to members and employees of the railroad commission traveling on private business. § 4394 prohibiting employees of the commission or the board of commissioners from accepting or requesting any pass for themselves or any in facilities for transportation of freight,[90] prohibiting the giving to any locality any unreasonable preference,[91] prohibiting discrimination between passengers from different localities as to transfer privileges,[92] requiring goods to be forwarded in the order in which they are received,[93] and requiring the carrier to permit tracks to be connected with its track.[94] other person except as herein otherwise provided. John v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 42 Mont. 18, 111 Pac. 632.

Statute not retrospective.—Laws 1909, c. 126, § 2, provides that no carrier shall give any free ticket, pass, or transportation for passengers between points within the state except to certain specified persons. Section 6 authorized the imposition of fines for violation of the act. Defendant leased a railroad, agreeing in the lease to transport stockholders of the lessor to and from their annual and special meetings "free of charge." Plaintiff, a stockholder of the lessor, applied for transportation and was refused. Held, that the issuance of the pass would not be a violation of chapter 126, since it can not be presumed that the legislature intended the act to have a retrospective effect, rendering former valid contracts illegal and void. Emerson v. Boston, etc., Railroad, 75 N. H. 427, 75 Atl. 529.

90. Commission rule prohibiting discrimination against shippers and not against commodities.—The rule promulgated by the railroad commission of Georgia that carriers shall afford all persons in the conduct of their interstate business equal facilities in the transportation and delivery of freight, prohibits discrimination against shippers and not against commodities. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 122 Ga. 646, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119.

A siding connection is a "facility for transportation" within the Pennsylvania statute, Act June 4, 1883 (P. Co., 228 Pa. 575, 77 Atl. 909.

Effect of an unexpected rush of business.—The Arkansas statute, Kirby's Dig., § 6804, making it unlawful for carriers to make any preference in furnishing cars, and requiring them to furnish without discrimination sufficient facilities for the carriage of freight, is but declaratory of the common law, making it the duty of carriers to furnish facilities for the transportation of freight offered in the regular course of business, but without requiring them to furnish facilities for an unprecedented rush of business, and a carrier unable to furnish cars for all shippers, by reason of an unexpected rush of business, must furnish such cars as it has to all shippers, without discrimination. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Clay Gin Co., 77 Ark. 357, 92 S. W. 531.

91. Statutes forbidding the giving to any locality any unreasonable preference.—The New Jersey Public Utility Law (P. L. 1911, p. 374) is not merely declaratory of the commutation law, but forbids the giving to any locality any unreasonable preference or the subjection of any locality to any prejudice. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Board, 83 N. J. L. 67, 83 Atl. 945.

92. How commission order may be complied with.—An order of a railroad commission requiring an electric railroad to cease an unlawful discrimination between the passengers from one locality and those from another locality by desisting from refusing the latter the same transfer privileges voluntarily accorded to the former may be complied with by giving transfers to all or by desisting entirely from giving transfers, and it is not a positive command to give transfers. Portland R., etc., Co. v. Railroad Comm., 56 Ore. 468, 109 Pac. 273, denying rehearing 105 Pac. 709.

93. Phrase "warehouses or depots" embraces entire station.—The Texas statute, Rev. St. 1895, art. 4537, directing railroads receiving goods for transportation into their "warehouses or depots" to forward them in the order in which they are received, and making them liable for losses occasioned by a failure so to do, requires a railroad to forward property received for shipment in the order in which it is received, though merely received on a platform used for handling that kind of property; the phrase "warehouses or depots" embracing the entire station of the road. Hill v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 75 S. W. 874, reversed St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hill, 97 Tex. 506, 80 S. W. 368.

94. Connection required to be permitted only where such privilege had already been granted.—Under the Washington statute, 1 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St., § 4332, providing that it shall be unlawful for any railroad to discriminate in charges or facilities for transportation, and that every road permitting any one to connect a track with its track for the accommodation of any elevator, shall accord the same right to every other person soliciting it, a railroad company is not required to permit a connection with its track, except where it had already granted such privilege. Northwestern Warehouse Co. v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 32 Wash. 218, 73 Pac. 388.

§ 101. Who Are Common Carriers within the Rule Prohibiting Discrimination.—A railway company holding itself out to the public as ready to do switching, which requires it to have its own rails and right of way, and go upon the rails and right of way of another company, with which it has no express contract relating either to compensation for switching or to track rights, is a common carrier, and as such must switch cars without discrimination against a disfavored shipper.[95] A railroad, which serves business houses located along a spur track by delivering to them cars of freight and cars to be freighted and shipped, is a common carrier with respect to the use it makes of the track, and is, as such, bound to treat the houses located along the track without discrimination, and can not discontinue its service as to one and continue it as to others.[96]

§ 102. What Constitutes an Unlawful Preference or Discrimination.—What is an unlawful preference or discrimination is, in each particular case, a mixed question of law and fact, and must be ascertained by applying to the facts in the case the principles of the common law, or the peculiar provisions of the constitutional or statutory enactment or commission order governing the case. Guided by this basic rule of interpretation the courts have in many cases determined whether an unlawful preference was shown,[97] or have held that certain facts in evidence constituted,[98] or that certain facts did not consti-

97. The act of a carrier in hauling goods for some shippers without prepayment of freight, and not for others engaged in the same business, does not constitute a violation of the Michigan statute, Laws 1907, No. 312, § 17, making it unlawful for a common carrier to give any preference to any shipper or subject him to any undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice. Brown, etc., Coal Co. v. Grand Trunk R. System, 159 Mich. 565, 124 N. W. 528.

Refusing to furnish cars for loading on station track.—Defendant railroad company, which had previously permitted the loading of cars with coal on its side track at a station, made a regulation by which it withdrew such permission, and it thereafter refused to furnish cars to be so loaded to plaintiff or to any other shipper. During such time, however, certain mine owners, who through agreements with the company had constructed private spur tracks to their mines, were furnished cars, some of which they loaded from wagons while standing on such spur tracks before the development of the mines and the construction of tipples for loading. Held, that the furnishing of cars for such purpose, while refusing to furnish cars for loading on the station track to plaintiff, who had constructed no spur track, did not constitute the giving of an undue preference, either under the common law or the statute of Arkansas (Laws 1899, p. 89), prohibiting the giving of any preference in the furnishing of cars. Judgment 118 Fed. 169, affirmed. Harp v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., 61 C. C. A. 405, 125 Fed. 445.

98. Less charge for shipping to one consignee than to others.—Where a railroad makes a less charge for shipping to a certain consignee than to others in the same city, there is an unjust discrimination. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hill, 14 Ill. App. 579.

Contract to repay shipper a portion of charge paid by him.—A railroad company whose line extends to a point of intersection with a canal of the state can not make a valid contract to repay to a shipper a portion of the freight paid by him, it being the regular rate posted by the company and received from other shippers; such contract being prohibited by the Ohio statute, Rev. St., §§ 3366, 3367, to prevent discrimination in rates of carriage. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Diamond Coal Co., 61 O. St. 242, 55 N. E. 616.

Special rebate not extended to other shippers.—A contract by a railway company with a shipper, by which he is to ship his grain at the regular rates paid by all shippers, and then receive a special rebate, extended to no other shipper, or to but one other shipper, is contrary to §§ 2, 3 of the Illinois act of 1873, against extortion and unjust discrimination (2 Starr & C. Ann. St., c. 114, pars. 146, 147), and is void. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Ervin, 118 Ill. 250, 8 N. E. 862, 59 Am. Rep. 369.

Discrimination against local purchasers.—Where a common carrier allowed the purchasers of hogs to ship them to a central point of the state and from there to ship them to foreign states, charging them only the interstate rate which was lower than the local rate, and these hogs came into competition with those of purchasers making only local shipments, there was an unjust discrimination against the local purchasers within the purview of Iowa statute, Code, §§ 2124, 2125, respectively, providing that no common carrier shall give any preference to any particular person or persons. Central Trust Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Iowa), 135 N. W. 721.

But under these sections it is not a discrimination against local purchasers for a carrier to charge persons purchasing hogs for interstate shipment the lower interstate rate, though allowing them to assemble the hogs to a central point and from there reship them to foreign states; such hogs not coming into competition with local shipments. Central Trust Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co. (Iowa), 135 N. W. 721.

Contract to furnish transportation in payment for advertising.—A contract by a railroad company to furnish to the proprietors of a newspaper, as requested, transportation at the statutory rate under certain limitations and restrictions not required in ordinary tickets, in payment for advertising to be furnished "at agreed rates," which rates are not specified in the contract, but are to be settled by the parties themselves by another agreement contravenes the intent and purposes of the Nebraska statutes prohibiting unjust discriminations, which seek to preserve to every individual an equal right to the transportation service of carriers, since, if a proprietor of one newspaper may be selected by a carrier to receive transportation for advertising services, while the proprietor of another can not avail himself at his own option of the privileges of such a contract, there would be no uniformity of charge, and is violative of railway commission Act (Laws 1907, c. 90), § 14, and Cobbey's Ann. St. 1909, § 10,662, prohibiting common carriers from charging one person a greater or less compensation than another for the same service and from charging other than the rates fixed and established. State v. Union Pac. R. Co., 87 Neb. 29, 126 N. W. 859.

Discrimination between passengers in amount of fare.—Under the Georgia statute Civ. Code, § 2188, prohibiting discriminations by carriers, a railroad company can not lawfully demand of one passenger more fare for his transportation from one station to another on its line than it is in the habit, under like conditions and circumstances, of charging others for the same service. Phillips v. Southern R. Co., 114 Ga. 284, 40 S. E. 268.

Discrimination in charges in favor of certain towns.—The fare charged by an electric railroad company from the city limits of a city having more than 50,000 population to certain suburban towns was fifteen cents, without transfer privileges, while that charged upon another division to certain other towns, which were a less distance from the city limits, was ten cents, with transfer privileges. Held, that there was an unjust discrimination in charges in favor of the towns on the latter division, which the railroad commission properly corrected. Portland R., etc., Co. v. Railroad Comm., 57 Ore. 126, 105 Pac. 715.

Under the Oregon Railroad Commission Law (Laws 1907, p. 82, c. 53, § 28) authorizing the Railroad commission, upon finding on investigation upon the complaint of any municipality, that fares are unreasonable or discriminatory, to substitute just and reasonable fares therefor, fares may be changed if they are unjustly discriminatory, though not unreasonable for the service performed, so that, where an electric railroad company voluntarily charged five cent fare, with transfer privileges, from the limits of a city of over 50,000 population, within which the fare was limited to five cents by statute, to a certain town, it thereby established the value of similar service on its other lines, and it was an unjust discrimination to charge a ten cent fare on a different line to another town an equal distance from the limits of such city, and that the population outside the city limits on the five cent lines was denser than on the ten cent lines, or that the fares on the former lines were limited to five cents by a contract with the company's predecessor, or that the physical conditions at the point on one of the five cent lines where it crossed the city limits made it impossible for passengers to leave the cars there, was immaterial. Portland R., etc., Co. v. Railroad Comm., 56 Ore. 468, 105 Pac. 709, rehearing denied 109 Pac. 273.

Inequality in charges between points in state and a point in another state.—A charge of a greater sum by a railroad company for freight to a point in another state from a point in Illinois than from another point in Illinois, more distant, is an unjust discrimination, within the Illinois statute, Rev. St. 1874, p. 817, § 87, prohibiting unjust discrimination by railroad companies in rates or charges for the transportation of passengers or freight on railroads within the state, where it is not shown that such inequality in the charges is all for carriage entirely beyond the limits of Illinois; the presumption being that the excess in charge for the less distance affects every part of the line of carriage between the more distant point and the state line, proportionally with the balance of the line. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. People, 105 Ill. 236.

etc., R. Co. v. Gallaher, 79 Tex. 685, 15 S. W. 694.

Rebilling rate.—Evidence that the effect of a rebilling rate adopted by a complainant railroad was to enable a dealer in Vicksburg, the terminus of its road reached by an associate line, to ship a barge load of grain received there, over complainant's road, at the rate of three and one-half cents, under the guise of rebilling, while a barge load of grain received there by a dealer in Meridian, the other terminus of complainant's road, could only be shipped over the same upon payment of the local rate of ten cents per one hundred pounds, showed an unjust discrimination in favor of those receiving freight over the associate line. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 86 Miss. 667, 38 So. 356, affirmed in 203 U. S. 496, 51 L. Ed. 289, 27 S. Ct. 163.

Discrimination in joint rates.—A petition alleging that two railroad companies voluntarily established joint rates, and charged plaintiff a rate in excess of the same joint rates on like shipments, at the same time, which were made to other points, for like distances, over their lines of road, makes a prima facie case, showing that they have violated the Iowa statute, Acts 22d Gen. Assem., c. 28, as to discrimination. Blair v. Sioux, etc., R. Co. (Iowa), 73 N. W. 1053.
